Subtitle D—Intelligence-Related Matters

SEC. 931. DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE STRATEGY FOR OPEN-SOURCE INTELLIGENCE.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Open-source intelligence (OSINT) is intelligence that is produced from publicly available information and is collected, exploited, and disseminated in a timely manner to an appropriate audience for the purpose of addressing a specific intelligence requirement.

(2) With the Information Revolution, the amount, significance, and accessibility of open-source information has expanded significantly, but the intelligence community has not expanded its exploitation efforts and systems to produce open-source intelligence.

(3) The production of open-source intelligence is a valuable intelligence discipline that must be integrated into intelligence tasking, collection, processing, exploitation, and dissemination to ensure that United States policymakers are fully and completely informed.

(4) The dissemination and use of validated open-source intelligence inherently enables information sharing since open-source intelligence is produced without the use of sensitive sources and methods. Open-source intelligence products can be shared with the American public and foreign allies because of the unclassified nature of open-source intelligence.

(5) The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States (popularly referred to as the "9/11 Commission"), in its final report released on July 22, 2004, identified shortfalls in the ability of the United States to use all-source intelligence, a large component of which is open-source intelligence.

(6) In the Intelligence Reform and Terrorism Prevention Act of 2004 (Public Law 108–458), Congress calls for coordination of the collection, analysis, production, and dissemination of open-source intelligence.

(7) The Commission on the Intelligence Capabilities of the United States Regarding Weapons of Mass Destruction, in its report to the President released on March 31, 2005, found that "the need for exploiting open-source material is greater now than ever before," but that "the Intelligence Community's open source programs have not expanded commensurate with either the increase in available information or with the growing importance of open source data to today's problems".

(b) DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE STRATEGY FOR OPEN-SOURCE INTELLIGENCE.—

(1) DEVELOPMENT OF STRATEGY.—The Secretary of Defense shall develop a strategy for the purpose of integrating open-source intelligence into the Defense intelligence process. The strategy shall be known as the "Defense Strategy for Open-Source Intelligence". The strategy shall be incorporated within the larger Defense intelligence strategy.

(2) SUBMISSION.—The Secretary shall submit to Congress a report setting forth the strategy developed under paragraph (1). The report shall be submitted not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) MATTERS TO BE INCLUDED.—The strategy under subsection (b) shall include the following

(1) A plan for providing funds over the period of the future-years defense program for the development of a robust open-source intelligence capability for the Department of Defense, with particular emphasis on exploitation and dissemination.

(2) A description of how management of the collection of open-source intelligence is currently conducted within the Department of Defense and how that management can be improved.

(3) A description of the tools, systems, centers, organizational entities, and procedures to be used within the Department of Defense to perform open-source intelligence tasking, collection, processing, exploitation, and dissemination.

(4) A description of proven tradecraft for effective exploitation of open-source intelligence, to include consideration of operational security.

(5) A detailed description on how open-source intelligence will be fused with all other intelligence sources across the Department of Defense.

(6) A description of—

(A) a training plan for Department of Defense intelligence personnel with respect to open-source intelligence; and

(B) open-source intelligence guidance for Department of Defense intelligence personnel.

(7) A plan to incorporate the function of oversight of open-source intelligence—

(A) into the Office of the Undersecretary of Defense for Intelligence; and

(B) into service intelligence organizations.

(8) A plan to incorporate and identify an open-source intelligence specialty into personnel systems of the Department of Defense, including military personnel systems.

(9) A plan for the use of intelligence personnel of the reserve components to augment and support the open-source intelligence mission.

(10) A plan for the use of the Open-Source Information System for the purpose of exploitation and dissemination of open-source intelligence.

(1) The Committee on Armed Services and the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate.

(2) The Committee on Armed Services and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 933. OPERATIONAL FILES OF THE DEFENSE INTELLIGENCE AGENCY.

SEC. 1023. SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING DRUG TRAFFICKING DETERRENCE.

(a) Findings.—Congress finds the following:

(1) According to the Department of State, drug trafficking organizations shipped approximately nine tons of cocaine to the United States through the Dominican Republic in 2004, and are increasingly using small, high-speed watercraft.

(2) Drug traffickers use the Caribbean corridor to smuggle narcotics to the United States via Puerto Rico and the Dominican Republic. This route is ideal for drug trafficking because of its geographic expanse, numerous law enforcement jurisdictions, and fragmented investigative efforts.

(3) The tethered aerostat system in Lajas, Puerto Rico, contributes to deterring and detecting smugglers moving illicit drugs into Puerto Rico. The aerostat's range and operational capabilities allow it to provide surveillance coverage of the eastern Caribbean corridor and the strategic waterway between Puerto Rico and the Dominican Republic, known as the Mona Passage.

(4) Including maritime radar on the Lajas aerostat will expand its ability to detect suspicious vessels in the eastern Caribbean corridor.

(b) Sense of Congress.—Given the findings contained in subsection (a), it is the sense of Congress that—

(1) Congress and the Department of Defense should fund the Counter-Drug Tethered Aerostat program; and

(2) the Department of Defense should install maritime radar on the Lajas, Puerto Rico, aerostat.

SEC. 1234. THE UNITED STATES-CHINA ECONOMIC SECURITY REVIEW COMMISSION.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(1) The 2004 Report to Congress of the United States-China Economic and Security Review Commission states that—

(A) China's State-Owned Enterprises (SOEs) lack adequate disclosure standards, which creates the potential for United States investors to unwittingly contribute to enterprises that are involved in activities harmful to United States security interests;

(B) United States influence and vital long-term interests in Asia are being challenged by China's robust regional economic engagement and diplomacy;

(C) the assistance of China and North Korea to global ballistic missile proliferation is extensive and ongoing;

(D) China's transfers of technology and components for weapons of mass destruction (WMD) and their delivery systems to countries of concern, including countries that support acts of international terrorism, have helped create a new tier of countries with the capability to produce WMD and ballistic missiles;

(E) the removal of the European Union arms embargo against China that is currently under consideration in the European Union would accelerate weapons modernization and dramatically enhance Chinese military capabilities;

(F) China is developing a leading-edge military with the objective of intimidating Taiwan and deterring United States involvement in the Taiwan Strait, and China's qualitative and quantitative military advancements have already resulted in a dramatic shift in the cross-Strait military balance toward China; and

(G) China's growing energy needs are driving China into bilateral arrangements that undermine multilateral efforts to stabilize oil supplies and prices, and in some cases may involve dangerous weapons transfers.

(2) On March 14, 2005, the National People's Congress approved a law that would authorize the use of force if Taiwan formally declares independence.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS FOR COMPREHENSIVE STRATEGY.—It is the sense of Congress that the President should present to Congress quickly a comprehensive strategy to—

(1) address the emergence of China economically, diplomatically, and militarily;

(2) promote mutually beneficial trade relations with China; and

(3) encourage China's adherence to international norms in the areas of trade, international security, and human rights.

(c) CONTENTS OF STRATEGY.—The strategy referred to in subsection (b) should address the following:

(1) Actions to address China's policy of undervaluing its currency, including—

(A) encouraging China to continue to upwardly revalue the Chinese yuan against the United States dollar;

(B) allowing the yuan to float against a trade-weighted basket of currencies; and

(C) concurrently encouraging United States trading partners with similar interests to join in these efforts.

(2) Actions to make better use of the World Trade Organization (WTO) dispute settlement mechanism and applicable United States trade laws to redress China's trade practices, including—

(A) exchange rate manipulation;

(B) denial of trading and distribution rights;

(C) insufficient intellectual property rights protection;

(D) objectionable labor standards;

(E) subsidization of exports; and

(F) forced technology transfers as a condition of doing business.

(3) The United States Trade Representative should consult with United States trading partners regarding any trade dispute with China.

(4) Actions to encourage United States diplomatic efforts to identify and pursue initiatives to revitalize United States engagement in East Asia. The initiatives should have a regional focus and complement bilateral efforts. The Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation forum (APEC) offers a ready mechanism for pursuit of such initiatives.

(5) Actions by the administration to work with China to prevent proliferation of prohibited technologies and to secure China's agreement to renew efforts to curtail commercial export by North Korea of ballistic missiles.

(6) Actions by the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Energy to consult with the International Atomic Energy Agency with the objective of upgrading the current loose experience-sharing arrangement whereby China engages in some limited exchanges with the organization to a more structured arrangement.

(7) Actions by the administration to develop a coordinated, comprehensive national policy and strategy designed to maintain United States scientific and technological leadership and competitiveness, in light of the rise of China and the challenges of globalization.

(8) Actions to review laws and regulations governing the Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States (CFIUS), including exploring whether the definition of national security should include the potential impact on national economic security as a criterion to be reviewed, and whether the chairmanship of CFIUS should be transferred from the Secretary of the Treasury to a more appropriate executive branch agency.

(9) Actions by the President and the Secretary of State and Secretary of Defense to press strongly their counterparts in the European Union and its member states to maintain and strengthen the embargo on selling arms to China.

(10) Actions by the administration to discourage foreign defense contractors from selling sensitive military-use technology or weapons systems to China.

SEC. 2835. REQUIRED CONSULTATION WITH STATE AND LOCAL ENTITIES ON ISSUES RELATED TO INCREASE IN NUMBER OF MILITARY PERSONNEL AT MILITARY INSTALLATIONS.

If the base closure and realignment decisions of the 2005 round of base closures and realignments under the Defense Base Closure and Realignment Act of 1990 (part A of title XXIX of Public Law 101–510; 10 U.S.C. 2687 note) or the Integrated Global Presence and Basing Strategy would result in an increase in the number of members of the Armed Forces assigned to a military installation, the Secretary of Defense, during the development of the plans to implement the decisions or strategy with respect to that installation, shall consult with appropriate State and local entities to ensure that matters affecting the local community, including requirements for transportation, utility infrastructure, housing, education, and family support activities, are considered.

SEC. 2836. SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING INFRASTRUCTURE AND INSTALLATION REQUIREMENTS FOR TRANSFER OF UNITS AND PERSONNEL FROM CLOSED AND REALIGNED MILITARY INSTALLATIONS TO RECEIVING LOCATIONS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(1) The decisions of the 2005 round of base closures and realignments and the Integrated Global Presence and Basing Strategy will result in the permanent change of station and relocation of hundreds of thousands of members of the Armed Forces and their families over the next six years.

(2) Critical quality-of-life concerns for military families related to the infrastructure and installation requirements to support the restructuring of the Armed Forces include adequate housing and continued access to quality education facilities and child care, health care, and other services.

(3) By ensuring that facilities and infrastructure are maintained at closing installations pending the actual change of station and relocation of members of the Armed Forces and their families and that adequate permanent facilities and infrastructure await them at the receiving installations, disruptions to unit operational effectiveness will be minimized and the quality of life of military families will be protected.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that the Secretary of Defense should seek to ensure that the permanent facilities and infrastructure necessary to support the mission of the Armed Forces and the quality-of-life needs of members of the Armed Forces and their families are ready for use at receiving locations before units are transferred to such locations as a result of the 2005 round of base closures and realignments and the Integrated Global Presence and Basing Strategy.

SEC. 2837. DEFENSE ACCESS ROAD PROGRAM AND MILITARY INSTALLATIONS AFFECTED BY DEFENSE BASE CLOSURE PROCESS OR INTEGRATED GLOBAL PRESENCE AND BASING STRATEGY.

(b) STUDY OF SURFACE TRANSPORTATION INFRASTRUCTURE OF AFFECTED INSTALLATIONS.—The Secretary of Defense shall conduct a study—

(1) to identify each military installation, if any, that will be significantly impacted by an increase in the number of members of the Armed Forces assigned to the installation as a result of the 2005 round of defense base closure and realignment under the Defense Base Closure and Realignment Act of 1990 or the Integrated Global Presence and Basing Strategy; and

(2) to determine whether the existing surface transportation infrastructure at each installation identified under paragraph (1) is adequate to support the increased vehicular traffic associated with the increase in the number of defense personnel described in that paragraph.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than April 15, 2007, the Secretary shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report containing the results of the study conducted under subsection (b).

SEC. 2838. SENSE OF CONGRESS ON REVERSIONARY INTERESTS INVOLVING REAL PROPERTY AT NAVY HOMEPORTS.

It is the sense of Congress that, in implementing the decisions made with respect to Navy homeports as part of the 2005 round of defense base closures and realignments, the Secretary of the Navy should, when consistent with Federal policy supporting cost-free conveyances of Federal surplus property suitable for use to provide a public benefit, release or otherwise relinquish any entitlement to receive, pursuant to any agreement providing for such payment, compensation from any holder of a reversionary interest in real property used by the United States for improvements made to the property.

SEC. 2872. TRANSFER OF EXCESS DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE PROPERTY ON SANTA ROSA AND OKALOOSA ISLAND, FLORIDA, TO GULF ISLANDS NATIONAL SEASHORE.

(a) Findings.—Congress finds the following:

(1) Public Law 91-660 of the 91st Congress established the Gulf Islands National Seashore in the States of Florida and Mississippi.

(2) The original boundaries of the Gulf Islands National Seashore encompassed certain Federal land used by the Air Force and the Navy, and the use of such land was still required by the Armed Forces when the seashore was established.

(3) Senate Report 91-1514 of the 91th Congress addressed the relationship between these military lands and the Gulf Islands National Seashore as follows: "While the military use of these lands is presently required, they remain virtually free of adverse development and they are included in the boundaries of the seashore so that they can be wholly or partially transferred to the Department of the Interior when they become excess to the needs of the Air Force.".

(4) Although section 2(a) of Public Law 91-660 (16 U.S.C. 459h–1(a)) authorized the eventual transfer of Federal land within the boundaries of the Gulf Islands National Seashore from the Department of Defense to the Secretary of the Interior, an amendment mandating the transfer of excess Department of Defense land on Santa Rosa and Okaloosa Island, Florida, to the Secretary of the Interior is required to ensure that the purposes of the Gulf Islands National Seashore are fulfilled.

The Secretary of the Interior shall administer the transferred land as part of the seashore in accordance with the provisions of this Act.".

SEC. 2876. SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING COMMUNITY IMPACT ASSISTANCE RELATED TO CONSTRUCTION OF NAVY LANDING FIELD, NORTH CAROLINA.

It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the planned construction of an outlying landing field in North Carolina is vital to the national security interests of the United States; and

(A) economic development assistance;

(B) impact aid program assistance;

(C) the provision by cooperative agreement with the Navy of fire, rescue, water, and sewer services;

SEC. 2877. SENSE OF CONGRESS ON ESTABLISHMENT OF BAKERS CREEK MEMORIAL.

(a) Findings.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) In 1943 and 1944, the United States Armed Forces operated a rest and relaxation facility in Mackay, Queensland, Australia, for troops serving in the Pacific Theater during World War II.

(2) On June 14, 1943, a Boeing B-17C was transporting 6 crew members and 35 servicemen from Mackay to Port Moresby, New Guinea, to return the servicemen to duty after 10 days of rest and relaxation leave at an Army/Red Cross facility.

(3) The aircraft crashed shortly after take-off at Bakers Creek, Australia, killing all 6 crew members and 34 of the 35 servicemen being transported in what was at that point the worst crash in American air transport history, and what remains the worst air disaster in Australian history.

(4) Due to wartime censorship rules related to the movement of troops, the tragic crash and loss of life were not reported to the Australian or United States public.

(5) Many family members of those killed did not learn the circumstances of the troops deaths until they were contacted by the Bakers Creek Memorial Foundation beginning in 1992.

(6) As of May 2005, the Bakers Creek Memorial Foundation had contacted 36 of the 40 families that lost loved ones in the tragic crash, and was continuing efforts to locate the remaining four families to inform them of the true events of the crash at Bakers Creek.

(7) The Australian people marked the tragic crash at Bakers Creek with a memorial established in 1992, but no similar memorial has been established in the United States.

(b) Sense of Congress.—It is the sense of Congress that the Secretary of the Army may establish an appropriate marker, at a site to be chosen at the discretion of the Secretary, to commemorate the 40 members of the United States Armed Forces who lost their lives in the air crash at Bakers Creek, Australia, on June 14, 1943.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1815) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2006 for military activities of the Department of Defense, for military construction, and for defense activities of the Department of Energy, to prescribe military personnel strengths for such fiscal year, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment that is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

SUMMARY STATEMENT OF CONFERENCE ACTIONS

The Conferees recommend authorization of appropriations for fiscal year 2006 for the Department of Defense for procurement; research and development; test and evaluation; operation and maintenance; working capital funds; military construction and family housing; and for weapons and environmental restoration programs of the Department of Energy; that have a budget authority implication of $441.5 billion for the national defense function.

The Conferees recommend the merging authorization of appropriations for the Department of Defense of $50.0 billion for costs associated with ongoing contingency operations in Iraq and Afghanistan; $6.6 billion for costs associated with Hurricane Katrina; $130.0 million for costs associated with Avian Flu; and $40.0 million for costs associated with Pakistan Earthquake relief efforts.

Summary table of authorizations

The defense authorization act provides authorizations for appropriations, but does not generally provide budget authority. Budget authority is provided in the appropriations act.

In order to relate the conference recommendations to the budget resolution, matters in addition to the dollar authorizations contained in this bill must be taken into account. A number of programs in the national defense function are authorized in other legislation.

The following table summarizes authorizations included in the bill for fiscal year 2006 and, in addition, summarizes the implications of the conference action for the budget authority totals for national defense (budget function 050).

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Joint Combat Pistol program

The conferees are aware the U.S. Special Operations Command (SOCOM) has a requirement for a new .45 caliber pistol, the Joint Combat Pistol (JCP) program. The conferees understand that the SOCOM requirement is under review through the Joint Capabilities Integration and Development System process, and that the Army and the Marine Corps have expressed interest in the JCP program. The conferees note that SOCOM has issued a draft request for proposals (RFP) for the procurement of these new pistols and that this draft RFP contains an addendum for a potentially large quantity procurement. The conferees are not only concerned with the potential procurement of pistols in excess of the SOCOM requirement but also concerned with the proliferation of service programs to acquire a new combat pistol. The conferees expect the Department of Defense to acquire the JCP and any other new pistol in accordance with Department acquisition regulations and full and open competition. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to provide a report to the congressional defense committees, no later than April 1, 2006, on the acquisition strategy for pistols. The report would include an analysis of alternatives for the JCP program and details on the Joint Combat Pistol, Close Quarter Battle, Personal Defense Weapon, and any other Department acquisition program relating to military pistols. The report would also include an evaluation of the costs of utilizing the current inventory of serviceable M1911A1 pistols still in storage and the potential option of refurbishing unserviceable M1911A1 pistols.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A—Authorization of Appropriations

Authorization of appropriations (secs. 101–104)

The House bill contained provisions (secs. 101–104) that would authorize the recommended fiscal year 2006 funding levels for procurement Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force, and Defense-wide activities.

The Senate amendment contained similar provisions (secs. 101–104).

The conference agreement includes these provisions.

Subtitle B—Army Programs

Multiyear procurement authority for utility helicopters (sec. 111)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 111) that would authorize the Secretary of the Army to enter into a multiyear procurement contract, beginning with fiscal year 2007, for procurement of up to 461 helicopters in the UH–60M configuration and, acting as the executive agent for the Department of the Navy, in the MH–60S configuration.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 113).

The House recedes with an amendment that would authorize the Secretary to enter into a multiyear contract, beginning with fiscal year 2007, for the procurement of UH–60M Black Hawk utility helicopters and, acting as the executive agent for the Department of the Navy, enter into a multiyear contract for the procurement of MH–60S Sea Hawk utility helicopters. The conferees understand that the Department of the Army and the Department of the Navy intend to procure 461 H-60 helicopters.

Multiyear procurement authority for Modernized Target Acquisition Designation Sight/Pilot Night Vision Sensors for AH–64 Apache attack helicopters (sec. 112)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 112) that would authorize the Secretary of the Army to enter into a multiyear procurement contract, beginning with fiscal year 2006, for procurement of the Apache Modernized Target Acquisition Designation Sight/Pilot Night Vision Sensor (MTADS/PNVS).

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 112).

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would authorize the Secretary to enter into a multiyear procurement contract, beginning with fiscal year 2006, for procurement of the Apache MTADS/PNVS, with a 4 year limitation on the length of the contract.

Multiyear procurement authority for conversion of AH–64A Apache attack helicopters to the AH-64D Block II configuration (sec. 113)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 113) that would authorize the Secretary of the Army to enter into a multiyear procurement contract, beginning with fiscal year 2006, for procurement of the conversion of 96 Apache helicopters to the Block II configuration.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 111).

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would authorize the Secretary to enter into a multiyear procurement contract, beginning with fiscal year 2006, for procurement of the conversion of AH–64A Apaches to the AH-64D Block II configuration, with a 4 year limitation on the length of the contract. The conferees understand that the Department of the Army intends to convert at least 96 AH–64A Apache helicopters to the AH-64D Block II configuration.

Acquisition strategy for tactical wheeled vehicle programs (sec. 114)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 114) that would require the Secretary of the Army and the Secretary of the Navy to enter into a joint service program for the procurement of a new vehicle class of tactical wheeled vehicles.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees support the Army's revised strategy for acquiring tactical wheeled vehicles and understand the Army intends to recapitalize, modernize, and eventually replace the Army's existing light, medium, and heavy tactical wheeled vehicles with either a new next generation vehicle class or more capable current force tactical wheeled vehicles. The conferees are aware that, in some areas, the Army and Marine Corps are cooperating in the development of tactical wheeled vehicle replacements. However, the conferees also understand that the Marine Corps has its own program to replace an aging fleet of battlefield resupply vehicles, the Logistics Vehicle System-Replacement program, even though it appears that the Army's Palletized Load System could be an adequate replacement for Marine Corps resupply vehicles. The conferees believe that the Army and Marine Corps can do more to coordinate tactical wheeled vehicle requirements and execute a joint service program to acquire tactical wheeled vehicles. The conferees encourage the Army-Marine Corps Board to review the current requirements for Army and Marine Corps tactical wheeled vehicles with the intent to converge tactical wheeled vehicle requirements and acquisition.

Report on Army modular force initiative (sec. 115)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 115) that would place a $3.0 billion limitation on the obligation or expenditure of funds available for the acquisition programs for the Army modular force initiative until the Secretary of the Army submits a report to the congressional defense committees that outlines the full scope and funding levels of the programs considered part of the modular force initiative, and a detailed accounting of the use of funds provided for the modular force initiative in the 2005 emergency supplemental request.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would remove the funding limitation as contained in the House provision and directs the Secretary of the Army to submit a report to the congressional defense committees no later than 30 days after the date of the submission of the fiscal year 2006 request for emergency supplemental appropriations for the Department of Defense to the Congress.

The conferees have strongly supported and will continue to support the Army's modular force initiative. However, the conferees are concerned with modularity costs and the Army's ability to support current year and outyear funding for the modular force initiative. In March 2005, the Army's cost estimates for its modular force initiative was $48.0 billion. However, in a September 2005 report, the Government Accountability Office (GAO) found that the Army's cost estimate for the modularity initiative did not include $27.5 billion in personnel and construction costs, bringing potential known costs to $75.5 billion. Minimal information has been provided to the congressional defense committees on defined requirements and budget detail primarily because the Army modular force initiative has been funded through the use of emergency supplemental requests for the Department of Defense. The conferees require a greater level of detail to understand the Army's modular force initiative, and direct the Secretary of the Army to submit a report that would specify each program in the modular force initiative and the requirements, acquisition objective, funding profile, and unfunded requirements for each program specified as part of the Army's modular force initiative. The conferees expect the Army to provide the requested information aggregated by Army component.

Subtitle C—Navy Programs

Virginia-class submarine program (sec. 121)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 121) that would limit the total procurement end costs for five Virginia-class submarines (SSN-779, SSN-780, SSN-781, SSN-782, and SSN–783) to the cost estimates submitted for those vessels with the fiscal year 2006 budget request. The provision would allow the Secretary of the Navy to adjust the limitation amounts for economic inflation and for changes in federal, state, or local laws enacted after September 30, 2005. The provision would also require the Secretary to notify Congress of any adjustments made to the limitation amounts annually, with the submission of the budget request for the following fiscal year.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would raise the amounts of the limitation for the same five Virginia-class submarines to the contract ceiling prices for those five submarines. In addition to the two reasons for which the House bill would allow the Secretary to submit adjustments to the cost limitations, the Senate amendment would allow the Secretary to make adjustments for the amounts of outfitting and post-delivery costs, and the amounts of increases or decreases in costs of those submarines that are attributable to the insertion of new technology. The amendment would, however, limit those technologies that could be used for cost adjustment to those that would either lower life cycle costs or meet an emerging threat.

The conferees direct the Secretary to submit a report to the congressional defense committees, upon submission of the budget request for fiscal year 2007, including a list of items and activities, and their estimated costs, that would be required during the outfitting and post-delivery of each of the five submarines covered by this provision.

LHA replacement (LHA(R)) amphibious assault ship program (sec. 122)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 122) that would limit the total amount obligated or expended for procurement of each ship of the LHA replacement (LHA(R)) amphibious assault ship program to $2.0 billion. The provision would allow the Secretary of the Navy to adjust the amount for certain reasons, and report on those adjustments annually with the submission of the budget request. The provision would also prohibit the obligation or expenditure of any funds for procurement of the LHA(R) until the Secretary of Defense certifies to the congressional defense committees that: (1) a detailed Operational Requirements Document had been approved by the Joint Requirements Oversight Council; and (2) a stable design exists for the LHA(R) class of vessels.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would prohibit expenditure of more than 70 percent of the funds available in Shipbuilding and Conversion, Navy, for the LHA(R) program, until the Secretary of the Navy certifies in writing to the congressional defense committees that there is an approved operational requirement and a stable design for the LHA(R) class of vessels.

Cost limitation for next-generation destroyer program (sec. 123)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 123) that would limit the amount of procurement funds obligated or expended for each future major surface combatant, destroyer type, to $1.7 billion. The provision would allow the Secretary of the Navy to adjust this amount for economic inflation and for changes in federal, state, or local laws enacted after September 30, 2005. The provision would also require the Secretary to notify Congress of any adjustments made to this limitation annually, with the submission of the annual budget request. The provision would authorize $700.0 million in the Research, Development, Test, and Evaluation, Navy account for technology development and demonstration for this ship. The provision would also require the Secretary to ensure that the acquisition plan for this ship would: (1) use technologies from the DD(X) and CG(X) programs, as well as any other technology the Secretary considers appropriate; (2) require the ship to have an overall capability not less than that of the flight IIA version of the Arleigh Burke (DDG–51) class destroyer; and (3) posture the program to be ready for lead ship procurement not later than fiscal year 2011.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would limit the cost of the fifth vessel in the next-generation destroyer program to $2.3 billion. In addition to the two reasons the House bill would allow the Secretary to submit adjustments to the cost limitation, the Senate amendment would allow the Secretary to make adjustments for the amount of outfitting and post-delivery costs, and the amounts of increases or decreases in costs of the vessel that are attributable to the insertion of new technology. The amendment would, however, limit those technologies that could be used for cost adjustment to those that would either lower life cycle costs or meet an emerging threat. The amendment would require the Secretary to start reporting any adjustment to the cost limitation with the submission of the budget request for the year in which a contract for detail design and construction of the fifth vessel of the next-generation destroyer is expected to be awarded.

The conferees direct the Secretary to submit a report to the congressional defense committees, which would accompany the first report of cost limitation adjustment, that includes a list of items and activities, and their estimated costs, that would be required during the outfitting and post-delivery for this vessel.

Littoral combat ship (LCS) program (sec. 124)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 124) that would limit the amounts obligated or expended for each ship of the Littoral Combat Ship (LCS) class, to include the amounts for mission modules, to $400.0 million. The provision would allow the Secretary of the Navy to adjust this amount for economic inflation and for changes in federal, state, or local laws enacted after September 30, 2005. The provision would also require the Secretary of the Navy to notify Congress of any adjustments made to this limitation annually, with the submission of the annual budget request. The provision would further prevent the Navy from requiring any LCS vessels or LCS mission modules until the Secretary of Defense submits the results of an operational evaluation of the first four LCS vessels, conducted by the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation, and a certification that there is a stable design for LCS to the congressional defense committees.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would limit the cost of the fifth and sixth vessels of the LCS-class to $220.0 million, excluding amounts for elements designated by the Secretary of the Navy as a mission package. In addition to the two reasons the House bill would allow the Secretary of the Navy to submit adjustments to the cost limitation, the Senate amendment would include the amount of outfitting the post-delivery costs, and the amounts of increases or decreases in cost of the vessels that are attributable to the insertion of new technology. The amendment would, however, limit those technologies that could be used for cost adjustment to those that would either lower life cycle costs or meet an emerging threat. The amendment would require the Secretary to start reporting any adjustment to the cost limitation with the submission of the budget request for the year in which a contract for detail design and construction of the fifth vessel of the next-generation destroyer is expected to be awarded. The amendment would also require the Secretary of the Navy to report, with the submission of the annual budget request, those elements that are designated as mission packages for the LCS-class of vessels, and their estimated cost. The amendment would limit the use of funds for any LCS vessels or mission packages, after the first four vessels, until the Secretary of the Navy submits a certification to the congressional defense committees that the LCS design is stable.

The conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to submit a report to the congressional defense committees, which would accompany the first report of cost limitation adjustment, that includes a list of items and activities, and their estimated costs, that would be required during the outfitting and post-delivery for these vessels.

Prohibition on acquisition of next-generation destroyer through a single shipyard (sec. 125)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 121) that would prohibit the acquisition of the next-generation destroyer (DD(X)) through a winner-take-all acquisition strategy. The provision would also prohibit the obligation or expenditure of funds for the purpose of pursuing a winner-take-all acquisition strategy. The provision would define a winner-take-all acquisition strategy as one leading to the acquisition, including both design and construction, of the next-generation of destroyers through a single shipyard.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would not specify the DD(X) as the next-generation destroyer, but instead define the next-generation destroyer program as that which will acquire and deploy a new class of destroyers as the follow-on to the Arleigh Burke-class of destroyers.

Aircraft carrier force structure (sec. 126)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 128) that would amend section 5062 of title 10, United States Code, by inserting a new subsection that would require the naval combat forces of the Navy to have no less than 12 operational aircraft carriers, and would clarify that an operational aircraft carrier could be one which is temporarily unavailable for worldwide deployment due to routine or scheduled maintenance or repair. The provision would also require the Secretary of Defense to take all necessary actions to ensure that the U.S.S. John F. Kennedy (CV–67) is maintained in a fully mission capable status, and would authorize $60.0 million in the Operations and Maintenance, Navy account for the operation and routine maintenance of the U.S.S. John F. Kennedy.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 321) that would authorize $288.0 million in the Operations and Maintenance, Navy account from this Act and any other Act for fiscal years 2005 and 2006, only for the repair and maintenance to extend the life of the U.S.S. John F. Kennedy. The provision would prohibit the Secretary of the Navy from reducing the number of active aircraft carriers of the Navy below 12 until the later of: (1) 180 days after submission of the 2005 Quadrennial Defense Review, as required by section 118 of title 10, United States Code; or (2) the date on which the Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, certifies to the congressional defense committees that agreements have been entered into to provide port facilities for the permanent forward deployment of such number of aircraft carriers as is necessary in the Pacific Command Area of Responsibility.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would amend section 5062 of title 10, United States Code, by inserting a new subsection that would require the naval combat forces of the Navy to include no less than 12 operational aircraft carriers, and would specify that an operational aircraft carrier includes an aircraft carrier that is temporarily unavailable for worldwide deployment due to routine or scheduled maintenance or repair. The amendment would also authorize up to $288.0 million in the Operations and Maintenance, Navy account for repair and maintenance to extend the life of the U.S.S. John F. Kennedy.

Refueling and complex overhaul of the U.S.S. Carl Vinson (sec. 127)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 126) that would authorize approximately $1.5 billion from the Shipbuilding and Conversion, Navy account as the first increment of the nuclear refueling and complex overhaul (RCOH) of the U.S.S. Carl Vinson. The provision would authorize the Secretary of the Navy to enter into a contract during fiscal year 2006 for this RCOH, but would also require as a condition of this contract that any obligation of the United States to make a payment under the contract for a fiscal year after fiscal year 2006 is subject to the availability of appropriations.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 124).

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would authorize $1.5 billion for the RCOH, but would acknowledge the fact that the contract has already been entered into, using the authority of Public Law 109–104, enacted on November 19, 2005. The amendment would also clarify that the $89.0 million made available by Public Law 109–104 is part of the $1.5 billion authorized for fiscal year 2006.

CVN–78 aircraft carrier (sec. 128)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 122) that would authorize the Secretary of the Navy to fund the detail design and construction of the aircraft carrier designated CVN–78 using split funding in the Shipbuilding and Conversion, Navy account in fiscal years 2007, 2008, 2009, and 2010. The provision would direct that the contract for this ship provide that any obligation of the United States to make a payment for a fiscal year after 2006 would be subject to the availability of appropriations.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would reduce the number of years the funding could be split to fiscal years 2007, 2008, and 2009.

LHA replacement (LHA(R)) ship (sec. 129)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 123) that would authorize $325.4 million in the Shipbuilding and Conversion, Navy, account in fiscal year 2006 for design, advance procurement, advance construction, detail design, and construction for the lead ship of the LHA(R) class of vessels. The provision would also approve incremental funding for the lead ship in fiscal years 2007 and 2008. The provision would also authorize the Secretary of the Navy to enter into a contract for design, advance procurement, and advance construction for the lead LHA(R) in fiscal year 2006, and to enter another contract for the detail design and construction for the lead LHA(R) in fiscal year 2006. The provision would provide that any obligation of the United States to make a payment under these contracts for a fiscal year after 2006 would be subject to the availability of appropriations for that purpose for that fiscal year.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would lower the authorized amount of funds in Shipbuilding and Conversion, Navy, to $200.5 million for LHA(R) in fiscal year 2006.

Report on alternative propulsion methods for surface combatants and amphibious warfare ships (sec. 130)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 127) that would require the Secretary of the Navy to submit a report to the congressional defense committees not later than the submission of the fiscal year 2007 budget request. The report would include the results of a 2005 study, directed by the Chief of Naval Operations, on alternative propulsion methods for Navy surface combatant vessels. The provision would require that the report include the study objectives, methodology, description of alternatives, conclusions, and the Secretary's intended actions based on the conclusion of the study.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would extend the date for the submission of the report until November 1, 2006. The amendment would also require the contents of the report to examine the life cycle costs of the various alternatives, including nuclear power alternatives, in the report.

The conferees expect the Navy to brief the congressional defense committees on the organization and study plan for the preparation of this report by April 1, 2006.

Subtitle D—Air Force Programs

C–17 aircraft program and assessment of intertheater airlift requirements (sec. 131)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 131) that would authorize the Secretary of the Air Force to enter into a multiyear contract, beginning with fiscal year 2006, for the procurement of up to 42 additional C–17 aircraft.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 131) that would authorize a similar multiyear contract authority, but would require the Secretary of Defense to certify to the congressional defense committees that the requirement for up to 42 additional C–17 aircraft is consistent with the Quadrennial Defense Review (QDR) before procuring additional C–17 aircraft under that multiyear authority. The Senate amendment would further require the Secretary of Defense to carry out an assessment of the intertheater airlift capabilities required to support the national defense strategy as part of the QDR. In the assessment, the Secretary of Defense would be required to explain how the future airlift force structure requirements in the QDR take into account: (1) the increased airlift demands associated with the Army modular brigade combat teams; (2) the objective to deliver a brigade combat team anywhere in the world within 4 to 7 days, a division within 10 days, and multiple divisions within 20 days; (3) the increased airlift demands associated with the expanded scope of operational activities of the Special Operations Forces; (4) the realignment of the overseas basing structure in accordance with the Integrated Presence and Basing Strategy; (5) adjustments in the force structure to meet homeland defense requirements; (6) the potential for simultaneous homeland defense activities and major combat operations; and (7) potential changes in requirements for intratheater airlift or sealift capabilities. The Senate amendment would also encourage the Secretary of the Air Force to procure sufficient C–17 aircraft to maintain the C–17 production at not less than the minimum sustaining rate in the event the Secretary of Defense is unable to make the multiyear certification, until sufficient flight test data has been obtained to validate the improved C–5 mission capability rates used in the Mobility Capabilities Study as a result of the C-5 Reliability Enhancement and Reengining Program and Avionics Modernization Program.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary of Defense to provide an additional explanation on how the future airlift force structure requirements in the QDR take into account the capability of the Civil Reserve Air Fleet to provide adequate augmentation in meeting global mobility requirements. The House amendment would further allow the intratheater airlift assessments to be submitted to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives up to 45 days after submission of the QDR, if the Department is unable to submit them with the budget request.

Prohibition on retirement of KC–135E aircraft (sec. 132)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 132) that would prohibit the Secretary of the Air Force from retiring any KC–135E aircraft of the Air Force in fiscal year 2006.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Prohibition on retirement of F–117 aircraft during fiscal year 2006 (sec. 133)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 134) that would prohibit the Secretary of the Air Force from retiring any F-117 Nighthawk stealth attack aircraft of the Air Force in fiscal year 2006.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Prohibition on retirement of C–130E/H tactical airlift aircraft during fiscal year 2006 (sec. 134)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 135) that would prohibit the Secretary of the Air Force from retiring any C-130E/H tactical airlift aircraft of the Air Force in fiscal year 2006.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Procurement of C–130J/KC–130J aircraft after fiscal year 2005 (sec. 135)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 136) that would require any C–130J/KC–130J procured after fiscal year 2005, including any C–130J/KC–130J aircraft procured through a multiyear contract continuing in force from a fiscal year before fiscal year 2006, to be procured through a contract under part 15 of the Federal Acquisition Regulation, relating to items by negotiated contract, rather than through a contract under part 12 of the Federal Acquisition Regulation, relating to acquisition of commercial items.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Report on Air Force aircraft aeromedical evacuation programs (sec. 136)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 137) that would require the Secretary of the Air Force to procure up to two aircraft dedicated to the aeromedical evacuation mission and capable of providing nonstop aeromedical evacuations across the Atlantic Ocean. The provision would also authorize $200.0 million in aircraft procurement funds for the procurement and equipping of these aircraft.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary to submit to the congressional defense committees a report on aeromedical evacuation programs of the Air Force not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act. The report should provide a comprehensive evaluation and overall assessment of the current aeromedical evacuation program, carried out through the use of designated aircraft, compared to the former aeromedical evacuation program, carried out through the use of dedicated aircraft. The report would include: (1) a description of challenges and capability gaps of the current aircraft aeromedical evacuation program compared to the challenges and capability gaps of the former program; (2) a description of possible means by which to best mitigate or resolve the challenges and capability gaps with respect to the current program; (3) a specification of medical equipment or upgrades needed to enhance the current program; (4) a specification of aircraft equipment or upgrades needed to enhance the current program; (5) a description of the advantages and disadvantages of the current program compared to the advantages and disadvantages of the former program; (6) a cost comparison analysis of the current program compared to the former program; and (7) a description of the manner in which customer feedback is obtained and applied to the current program.

The conferees agree that transitioning from a dedicated aircraft aeromedical evacuation (AE) program to a designated aircraft AE program is not without challenges, some of which are annotated in the Senate report accompanying S. 1042 (S. Rept. 109–69) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2006. Therefore, the conferees encourage the Secretary to address in the report all challenges and capability gaps related to the designated aircraft AE program and to outline explicitly the manner in which those challenges and capability gaps will be resolved. Furthermore, if the Secretary determines from the results of the report that dedicated AE aircraft are needed to augment the current AE program, the conferees encourage the Air Force to consider basing those aircraft at locations that have previous expertise in performing the dedicated aircraft AE mission.

Subtitle E—Joint and Multiservice Matters

Requirement that tactical unmanned aerial vehicles use specified standard data link (sec. 141)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 141) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to ensure that all service tactical unmanned aerial vehicles (UAV) be equipped with the standard tactical UAV data link known as the Tactical Common Data Link (TCDL) and configured to data formats consistent with the architectural standard for tactical UAVs, known as STANAG 4586. The provision would not allow the Department of Defense to expend funds on tactical UAVs that do not include the TCDL or STANAG 4586 standards. Finally, the provision would direct the secretary of each military department to submit a report to Congress providing the Secretary's certification as to whether or not all tactical UAVs are in compliance with the standard data link.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would clarify the House provision by providing the Undersecretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology, and Logistics (USD(AT&L)) with the authority to waive the standards directed in this provision, if the USD(AT&L) determines and certifies to the congressional defense committees that it would not be technologically feasible or economically acceptable to integrate a tactical data link into a specific tactical UAV.

The conferees understand that there is a class of UAVs, such as the Marine Corps Dragon Eye UAV and the Army Raven UAV, that are not large enough to carry the equipment required to integrate the TCDL standard. The conferees believe that the TCDL standard should be applied to all UAVs to the maximum extent possible.

Limitation on initiation of new unmanned aerial vehicle systems (sec. 142)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 142) that would preclude procurement of new unmanned aerial vehicle (UAV) systems by the military services without the written approval of the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology and Logistics (USD(AT&L)).

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would exempt UAV programs under contract as of the date of enactment of this Act or for which funds have been appropriated for procurement before the date of enactment of this Act from the requirement to have written approval from the USD(AT&L).

Advanced SEAL Delivery System (sec. 143)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 151) that would direct no amount of the $71.7 million authorized to be appropriated for advanced procurement of the Advanced SEAL Delivery System (ASDS) in fiscal year 2006 be expended until after a favorable Milestone C decision.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment that would restructure the program. On 22 November 2005, the U.S. Special Operations Command (SOCOM) announced and briefed the conferee's staff on a decision to restructure the ASDS program. The restructuring would focus on improving the reliability of the first boat, which was delivered to the Navy in June 2003. The ASDS Reliability Action Panel, comprised of government and industry technical experts, recommended restructuring the program.

The conferees commend the decision by SOCOM to focus on developing an operationally reliable first boat. The conferees have expressed their concern about technical challenges, contractor performance, and cost growth that have occurred in the ASDS program for several years, and have urged SOCOM, the Department of the Navy, and the Secretary of Defense to take a stronger management role with regard to the program.

The original program budget request has been reduced by $32.0 million. The restructuring reallocates an additional $21.0 million to research and development, an additional $10.1 million to operations and maintenance, and a reduction of $63.0 million in procurement. The conferees agree to authorize the restructured program, with some modifications. Although the restructured budget request included $11.0 million to fabricate and test one set of universal pylons for use on the Virginia-Class and Ohio-Class SSGN submarines, the conferees believe this is premature as the command expects the critical system review of the boat to take at least 1 year.

In addition, the conferees are not confident that the command will be able to conduct the additional field testing for the first boat now planned for fiscal year 2006. Therefore, the conferees direct that no amount of the $10.1 million increase in operation and maintenance funds authorized to be appropriated be obligated or expended until the Secretary revalidates to the congressional defense committees the requirement for the ASDS.

The conferees further direct the Secretary to submit a report on the conclusions of the Quadrennial Defense Review concerning the ASDS; the number of boats required and the manner of their employment; an updated cost estimate for the ASDS program; and a timeline for addressing the technological challenges faced by the program by March 1, 2006. Furthermore, the conferees direct that the Secretary report the conclusions of the ongoing critical systems review being conducted by the command to the congressional defense committees by January 1, 2007.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Authorization of two additional Arleigh Burke-class destroyers

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 125) that would authorize $2.5 billion in Shipbuilding and Conversion, Navy, for the construction of two additional Arleigh Burke-class destroyers, which would be constructed under a single, competitively awarded contract.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The outcome is reflected in the tables of this report in Shipbuilding and Conversion, Navy, line 14.

C–37B aircraft

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 138) that would authorize an increase of $45.0 million for the procurement of one C–37B aircraft for the Air Force.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conference outcome is reflected in the tables of this report in Aircraft Procurement, Air Force, line number 36.

Contingent transfer of additional funds for CVN–21 carrier replacement program

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 129) that would direct the transfer of $86.7 million from Operations and Maintenance, Defense-wide, to Shipbuilding and Conversion, Navy, for the purpose of accelerating the CVN–21 aircraft carrier replacement program. The provision would direct this transfer only if the Director, Program Analysis and Evaluation, of the Department of Defense, certifies that this addition of $86.7 million would allow the construction of CVN–21 to begin in fiscal year 2007, and would be limited to those amounts appropriated for fiscal year 2006.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Contract requirement for Objective Individual Combat Weapon—increment one

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 116) that would require the Secretary of the Army to ensure that the contractor for the Objective Individual Combat Weapon—increment one (OICW–1) is selected through a full and open competition.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees understand that the Army has terminated the existing competition and requests for proposal (RFP) for the OICW–1 program until further review by the Joint Requirements Oversight Council (JROC). The conferees are aware the JROC expects to convene to complete the Joint Capabilities Integration and Development System process for the OICW-1 capability development document sometime in fiscal year 2006 to be followed by an RFP that reflects OICW-1 requirements. The conferees expect that any new competition for the OICW program be conducted in a fair and open manner. Upon completion of the review by the JROC, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Army to submit a detailed report, to the congressional defense committees, that would outline the path forward for the OICW program. The report should include: (1) the planned acquisition strategy in meeting any new requirements as set forth by the JROC; (2) the cost and schedule impacts, if any, to the OICW—Increment two and three programs based on validated JROC requirements; and (3) the results of analysis of alternatives used in the JROC and Army's decision-making process.

Rapid intravenous infusion pumps

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 125) that would authorize $1.0 million for the procurement of rapid intravenous pumps for the Marine Corps.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conference outcome is reflected in the tables elsewhere in this report in Procurement, Marine Corps, line number 78.

Second source for production and supply of tires for the Stryker combat vehicle

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 116) that would require the Secretary of the Army to conduct a study on the feasibility and costs and benefits for the second source for the production and supply of tires for the Stryker combat vehicle.

The House bill contained no similar provision, but did contain funding in Procurement of Weapons and Tracked Combat Vehicles, Army, to qualify a second source for the production and supply of tires for the Stryker combat vehicle.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees recognize that tires are currently the highest sustainment demand item for the Stryker. The majority of tire failures are being caused by wear-out from high operational tempo; from increased pressure due to the weight associated with the addition of Slat add-on armor for protection against rocket propelled grenades; and damage from improvised explosive devices attacks. The conferees direct the Secretary of the Army to submit a report to the congressional defense committees, no later than 90 days after the enactment of this Act, that would evaluate Stryker tire availability and the need, if any, to qualify a second source for the tires of the Stryker vehicle.

UH-60 Black Hawk helicopter procurement in response to attrition

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 105) that would authorize $40.6 million for the procurement of two additional helicopters that were attrited in fiscal year 2006.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conference outcome is reflected in the tables of this report in Aircraft Procurement, Army, title XV.

Use of Tanker Replacement Transfer Fund for modernization of aerial refueling tankers

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 132) that would allow funds in the Tanker Replacement Transfer Fund to be used for the modernization of existing aerial refueling tankers, in addition to using the funds for a tanker acquisition program, if the modernization of those aircraft is consistent with the results of the analysis of alternatives for meeting the aerial refueling requirements of the Air Force.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

TITLE II—RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, TEST, AND EVALUATION

Research, Development, Test, and Evaluation overview

The budget request for fiscal year 2006 included an authorization of $69,356.0 million in Research and Development for the Department of Defense.

The House bill would authorize $69,469.0 million.

The Senate amendment would authorize $69,840.6 million.

The conferees recommend an authorization of $70,199.9 million.

Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Advanced submarine system development

The budget request included $163.0 million in PE 63561N for advanced submarine system development. Of this amount, $50.0 million is for the design of a future undersea superiority system.

The House bill would authorize the budget request.

The Senate amendment would authorize $123.0 million in PE 63561N, a decrease of $40.0 million since no specific plans on the use of these funds had been provided to the committee.

The conferees agree to authorize $163.0 million in PE 63561N, the budget request. The Navy has provided a detailed plan on the use of these funds. The objectives of this plan include: (1) reduce long-term costs in the construction of Virginia-class submarines; (2) perform ship concept studies; (3) perform independent studies of the submarine design and build base; and (4) identify submarine construction cost drivers and develop improved submarine cost models. The conferees would expect that the funds authorized for the undersea superiority system would be used in a manner consistent with the plan that was presented.

Air Force

Research, Development, Test, and Evaluation, Air Force overview

The budget request for fiscal year 2006 included an authorization of $22,612.4 million in Research Development, Test, and Evaluation, Air Force for the Department of Defense.

The House bill would authorize $22,418.2 million.

The Senate amendment would authorize $22,653.6 million.

The conferees recommend an authorization of $22,305.0 million.

Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Transformational satellite communications

The budget request included $835.8 million in PE 63845F for transformational military satellite communications (TSAT).

The House bill would authorize $435.8 million in PE 63845F, a decrease of $400.0 million.

The Senate amendment would authorize $635.8 million in PE 63845F, a decrease of $200.0 million.

The conferees agree to authorize $435.8 million in PE 63845F, a decrease of $400.0 million for the TSAT program.

The conferees would like to be clear that the reduction to the amount requested for the TSAT program should not be construed as a lack of support for the program, but rather a reflection of continuing concerns related to the TSAT acquisition approach. Several independent reviews of the TSAT program, some prompted by Congress, provide reason to believe the TSAT program can, with proper attention, avoid the pitfalls of so many prior military space programs including schedule delays, cost overruns, and poor management.

The October 20, 2005 report of the TSAT Program Review Group, chaired by Mr. Tom Young, complimented the TSAT program both for its comprehensive risk reduction program focused on critical technologies, and for efforts to assure that final requirements are executable and consistent with program resources. Of continuing concern to the group, however, was that the TSAT program office was inadequately staffed in terms of the number of experienced people, program cost estimates appeared to be unrealistic, and system requirements needed substantial additional refinement. Similarly, the Government Accountability Office, in its September 7, 2005, briefing to congressional staff on TSAT, found there to be "no fundamental discoveries or breakthroughs required for TSAT, but the level of difficulty in integrating these technologies is an unknown."

According to Air Force estimates, the $400.0 million reduction to the TSAT program recommended by the conferees will result in a delay to the systems design review and authority to proceed by 1 year. The conferees believe this schedule adjustment could help mitigate program risk by allowing time for the integration of critical technologies, refinement of requirements, and allow the TSAT program office time to get fully staffed. The conferees also emphasize the importance of risk reduction and system engineering efforts up front and strongly urge the Air Force to ensure adequate support for these efforts. With these changes, the TSAT program has the opportunity to be the first military space program in a decade to meet mission requirements within budget and on schedule.

The conferees assessed the need to direct the Department of Defense to acquire a fourth Advanced Extremely High Frequency (AEHF) space vehicle, and have decided to continue with the current planned program. The decision resulted from the conclusion that the planned constellation will provide protected communications until 2017. The launch of the first TSAT is expected in 2015 and provides a 2 year margin to mitigate against any additional unexpected delays to TSAT. However, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense, as required in section 912, to prepare alternatives should the current margin disappear, and to identify when acquisition of an additional AEHF would have to be initiated to avoid a break in production.

Space Radar

The budget request included $225.8 million in PE 63858F for Space Radar.

The House bill would authorize $100.0 million in PE 63858F, a decrease of $125.8 million.

The Senate amendment would authorize $150.8 million in PE 63858F, a decrease of $75.0 million.

The conferees agree to authorize $100.0 million in PE 63858F, a decrease of $125.8 million.

The conferees direct that fiscal year 2006 program funds be invested in the demonstration of the following:

(1) ground exploitation capability;

(2) horizontal integration;

(3) continued radar technology maturation; and

(4) new technology breakthroughs that will lower the payload weight and cost.

The conferees recommend that the Air Force thoroughly plan a demonstration program maximizing the use of ground, airborne, and existing space assets before committing to the new development of a subscale spacecraft. The conferees direct the Secretary of the Air Force, in coordination with the Director of the National Geospatial Intelligence Agency and the Director of the National Reconnaissance Office, to develop and submit a report to the congressional defense committees and congressional intelligence committees by March 15, 2006. The report should cover fiscal years 2006 through 2010 and include a detailed space radar program plan that would incorporate the above direction and focus on: (1) risk reduction, modeling, and simulation; (2) ground and air demonstrations and tests; and (3) the use of all planned or existing space assets. The Space Radar program plan, as reported to Congress, should provide annual technical and cost milestones that if met will provide confidence in a technically feasible and affordable program plan for space radar.

The nation requires a radar capability, and its users will have little concern about which platform collects the data. The conferees believe that the future success and stability of the space radar program rests in the demonstration, development, and deployment of a national radar capability consisting of fully integrated space, air, and surface components. As such, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense and the Director of National Intelligence to perform a detailed national utility study; develop a joint concept of operations for a future horizontally integrated radar capability highlighting the use of the suggested components; and submit a report to the congressional defense committees and congressional intelligence committees by November 1, 2006, on the utility study and the concept of operations.

Additional direction is contained in the classified annex to this report.

Penetrator study

The budget request included no funding in PE 64327F for the Hard and Deeply Buried Target Defeat system.

The House bill would authorize an increase of $4.0 million in PE 64327F for a penetrator study.

The Senate amendment contained no similar authorization.

The conferees agree to authorize $4.0 million in PE 64327F to conduct a sled test and a study on the physics of penetrating geologic media, to be completed by the end of fiscal year 2006.

E–8C joint surveillance and target attack radar system reengining

The budget request included $15.5 million in aircraft procurement for E–8C joint surveillance and target radar system (JointSTARS) modifications and $78.1 million for JointSTARS research and development, but included no funding for reengining of the JointSTARS aircraft fleet.

The House bill would authorize the budget request.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request for research and development, and an increase of $44.4 million in aircraft procurement to complete the non-recurring engineering (NRE) activities required to initiate a reengining program for the E–8C aircraft fleet.

The conferees agree to authorize the budget request in aircraft procurement, and an increase of $13.5 million in research and development, as included in the Air Force Chief of Staff's unfunded priority list for fiscal year 2006, to begin the NRE activities required to initiate a reengining program for the E–8C aircraft fleet. The conferees encourage the Secretary of the Air Force to complete funding of the NRE in the fiscal year 2007 budget request.

The conferees note that in January 2005 the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology, and Logistics announced the Department of Defense's intent to request quotes from industry on the costs to purchase or lease new engines and understand that the Department has completed evaluation of these quotes. If leasing new engines is the recommended alternative, the conferees expect the Secretary of the Air Force to propose an appropriate leasing arrangement that complies with the Office of Management and Budget guidance to implement this recommendation.

Defense-wide

Research, Development, Test, and Evaluation, Defense-wide overview

The budget request for fiscal year 2006 included an authorization of $18,803.4 million in Research, Development, Test, and Evaluation, Defense-wide for the Department of Defense.

The House bill would authorize $19,092.8 million.

The Senate amendment would authorize $18,868.3 million.

The conferees recommend an authorization of $19,108.9 million.

Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Ballistic missile defense

The budget request included $7.8 billion for the Missile Defense Agency for ballistic missile defense.

The conferees agree to authorize $7.8 billion for ballistic missile defense.

The conferees note that while fully funding the budget request level for missile defense, funds were reallocated from longer-term efforts in order to enhance the testing, fielding, and improvement of the current generation of missile defense capabilities. The conferees believe the most important mission for the Missile Defense Agency (MDA) at this time is to successfully develop, field, and improve those initial capabilities selected for deployment by the President in December 2002, including: ground-based interceptors, sea-based interceptors, additional Patriot (PAC–3) units, and sensors based on land, sea, and in space. The conferees direct the Director of the Missile Defense Agency to provide a report to the congressional defense committees by January 30, 2006, indicating specifically how the increases noted below will be allocated.

Ground-based midcourse defense

The budget request included $2.3 billion in PE 63882C for the ground-based midcourse defense (GMD) segment.

The House bill would authorize an increase of $125.0 million in PE 63882C for the GMD segment.

The Senate amendment would authorize an increase in $100.0 million in PE 63882C for the GMD segment.

The conferees agree to authorize $2.4 billion in PE 63882C for the GMD segment, an increase of $100.0 million.

The conferees direct that this increase be used for implementing the recommendations of the Independent Review Team and the Mission Readiness Task Force to enhance the GMD testing program.

Aegis ballistic missile defense

The budget request included $836.0 million in PE 63882C for Aegis ballistic missile defense (BMD).

The House bill would authorize an increase of $45.0 million in PE 63882C for Aegis BMD.

The Senate amendment would authorize an increase of $75.0 million in PE 63882C for Aegis BMD.

The conferees agree to authorize $911.0 million in PE 63882C for Aegis BMD, an increase of $75.0 million.

The conferees direct this increase be used for the following activities: (1) enhanced development and production of the Aegis BMD signal processor; (2) purchase of additional test equipment necessary to accelerate SM-3 production rates; (3) accelerated integration of the two-color seeker for the SM–3 kill vehicle; (4) long-lead funding for additional SM–3 missiles; (5) development of the throttleable divert and attitude control system; and (6) accelerated implementation of the engage-on-remote and launch-on-remote upgrades.

Ballistic missile defense system interceptor

The budget request included $229.7 million in PE 63886C for the ballistic missile defense (BMD) system interceptor.

The House bill would authorize the budget request.

The Senate amendment would authorize a decrease of $50.0 million in PE 63886C for the BMD system interceptor.

The conferees agree to authorize $179.7 million in PE 63886C, a decrease of $50.0 million for the BMD system interceptor.

The conferees are aware that the Kinetic Energy Interceptor (KEI) program has been restructured by the MDA to serve as risk mitigation for the primary boost-phase missile defense system, the Airborne Laser (ABL). As such, the conferees believe the funding request for KEI to be excessive and recommend remaining funds be directed toward reducing high-risk technology challenges. By continuing to address these technology challenges, the KEI program can remain in a position to become the focus of MDA boost-phase efforts should the ABL program fail to perform as expected.

Tactical exploitation of innovative sensors

The budget request included no funding for a joint program between the Naval Air Systems Command (NAVAIR) and the National Geospatial-Intelligence Agency (NGA) to support experimentation with innovative sensors in a tactical environment. The NAVAIR and the NGA have decided that a partnership to accelerate development and fielding of transformational capabilities to both the NGA and the Navy Department would be beneficial.

The House bill would authorize an increase of $15.0 million in PE 35102BQ to support this program.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The conferees agree to authorize the budget request.

However, the conferees view this program as a promising start for accelerating development and fielding on innovative sensors for supporting tactical operations. The conferees support this partnership as part of a broader effort to improve collection, tasking, processing, exploitation, and dissemination activities for enhancing support to such operations. Therefore, the conferees urge the NGA and the NAVAIR to continue this collaboration and expand their efforts to additional concept developments.

Test and Evaluation

Operational Test and Evaluation, Defense overview

The budget request for fiscal year 2006 included an authorization of $168.5 million in Operational Test and Evaluation, Defense for the Department of Defense.

The House bill would authorize $168.5 million.

The Senate amendment would authorize $168.5 million.

The conferees recommend an authorization of $168.5 million.

Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Items of Special Interest

Fuel Cell Vehicles

The conferees are aware that the Army's National Automotive Center has taken steps to develop and deploy fuel cell powered vehicles as a means to increase fuel efficiency, minimize thermal and noise signature, and provide mobile power on the battlefield. The conferees further understand that the Army is developing fuel cell powered vehicles to support special operations missions. The conferees direct the Army to provide the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and of the House of Representatives with a progress report on the development and deployment of these vehicles no later than April 1, 2006.

Joint Service Combat Feeding Technology

The conferees note that the Joint Service Combat Feeding Technology Demonstration program matures and demonstrates advanced techniques for the preparation and processing of combat rations. The conferees note that this research effort supports the goals of Army transformation by working to develop combat feeding technology with the potential to reduce logistics burdens, while improving the quality of food service for deployed troops. The conferees urge the Department of Defense to continue to adequately support research efforts in this area.

Report on naval surface fire support

The conferees are concerned about whether sufficient capability for naval surface fire support exists to support joint operations. The conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to submit a report to the congressional defense committees no later than April 1, 2006, on the Navy's capabilities to meet the joint force requirement for naval surface fire support. The conferees would expect the Secretary to take into account, in the preparation of this report, the views and recommendations of the Chief of Naval Operations and the Commandant of the Marine Corps, and direct the Secretary to include these written views and recommendations as attachments to the report. At a minimum, the report will include: (1) an analysis of the current capability to support expeditionary operations in the littorals with existing naval surface fire support; (2) a discussion of the alternatives available, including known research and development projects, to maintain or increase naval surface fire support capabilities within the future years defense program (FYDP), and within the 10 years following the FYDP; and (3)an estimate of the resources that would be required to accelerate promising near-term technologies that would enhance naval surface fire support.

Slow rotor concept

The conferees are aware of preliminary efforts to develop a heavy-lift, long-range, high-speed aircraft capable of operating from unimproved locations. The conferees encourage the Army to assess the value of slow rotor concepts, which could improve logistics and flexible basing options in support of combat operations.

Legislative Provisions Adopted

Subtitle A—Authorization of Appropriations

Authorization of appropriations (sec. 201)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 201) that would authorize the recommended fiscal year 2006 funding levels for the Research, Development, Test, and Evaluation accounts for the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force, Defense-wide activities, and the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 201).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Amount for defense science and technology (sec. 202)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 202) that would authorize $11,436.6 million for defense science and technology (S&T) programs.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 202) that would authorize $10,990.6 million for defense S&T programs.

The conferees agree to authorize $11,363.0 million for S&T programs, an increase of $840.9 million over the budget request.

The conferees are aware of recent studies on the role of basic science, and particularly defense basic research, in maintaining U.S. competitiveness and national security. The conferees have authorized an increase of over $75.0 million for defense basic research, including an increase of $10.0 million for the Science, Mathematics, and Research for Transformation scholarship program and $30.0 million for competitively-awarded university research programs within the military departments and computer science programs at DARPA.

Subtitle B—Program Requirements, Restrictions, and Limitations

Annual Comptroller General report on Future Combat Systems program (sec. 211)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 211) that would establish an annual review of the Future Combat Systems program by the Comptroller General to be submitted to the congressional defense committees by March 15 of each year.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Contract for the procurement of the Future Combat System (FCS) (sec. 212)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 211) that would direct the Secretary of the Army to procure the Future Combat System through a contract under part 15 of the Federal Acquisition Regulation, rather than through a transaction under section 2371 of title 10, United States Code.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Limitations on systems development and demonstration of manned ground vehicles under Armored Systems Modernization program (sec. 213)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 213) that would require the Secretary of Defense to complete an independent analysis and to submit a report to the congressional defense committees by February 1, 2006, on the Future Combat Systems (FCS) key performance parameter transportability requirement for the manned ground vehicles (MGV). The House bill also contained a provision (sec. 215) that would prohibit the use of any funds for MGV systems development and demonstration (SDD) until the objective requirements for those vehicles with respect to lethality and survivability have been met and demonstrated in a relevant environment to be at least equal to the lethality and survivability for the MGV to be replaced by such ground vehicles.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would limit funds available for the MGV SDD until the following is provided to the congressional defense committees:

(1) The Secretary of Defense certifies that the threshold requirements for MGV variants with respect to lethality and survivability have been met and demonstrated, in accordance with applicable regulations, in a relevant environment to be at least equal to the lethality and survivability for the MGV to be replaced by those variants;

(2) the Secretary of Defense submits the results of an independent analysis carried out with respect to the transportability requirement for the MGV under the FCS program;

(3) the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology, and Logistics submits the results of an independent cost estimate, prepared by the cost analysis improvement group of the Office of the Secretary of Defense, with respect to the FCS program;

(4) the Secretary of the Army submits a report containing the organizational design, quantities, and fielding plans for each of the current force brigade combat teams and FCS brigade combat teams; the research, development, test, and evaluation and procurement plan; and budgets for each of the FCS MGV variants; and

(5) the Secretary of Defense submits a report describing and evaluating the requirements and budgets of the Army technology insertion program for integrating FCS capabilities into the current force.

With regard to the certification of the threshold requirements for the survivability and lethality of the FCS MGV, the conferees believe that the Secretary of Defense should be able to demonstrate those capabilities in accordance with applicable regulations, to include, but not limited to, using modeling and simulation. The conferees expect the Secretary of Defense to include the views of the Chief of Staff of the Army in the report on his certification to Congress.

Separate program elements required for significant systems development and demonstration projects for Armored Systems Modernization program (sec. 214)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 214) that would specify the amount authorized for appropriation in section 201 for the Armored Systems Modernization program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would (1) direct the Secretary of Defense to ensure that, beginning with the fiscal year 2008 budget submission, a separate, dedicated program element is assigned to each of the systems development and demonstration (SDD) projects of the Armored Systems Modernization; (2) direct the Secretary of the Army to submit, beginning with the fiscal year 2007 budget submission, budget justification material for the SDD projects of the Armored Systems Modernization program as if the projects were separate program elements; (3) direct the Secretary of the Army to submit to the congressional defense committees not later than June 1, 2006, a report describing the manner in which the costs of integrating Future Combat Systems (FCS) capabilities into the current force could be assigned to a separate program element; and (4) submit budget justification material for the insertion of FCS capabilities into the current force under the Armored Systems Modernization program.

Initiation of program to design and develop next-generation nuclear attack submarine (sec. 215)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 217) that would require the Secretary of the Navy to carry out a program to design and develop a class of submarines that would serve as a successor to the Virginia-class. The objective of the provision would be to develop a submarine with capabilities meeting or exceeding those of the Virginia-class at a dramatically lower cost, with procurement commencing in fiscal year 2014. The provision would require the Secretary to submit a report on this program, with the submission of the budget request for fiscal year 2007, that would include: (1) an outline of the management approach to be used in executing the program; (2) the goals for the program; and (3) a schedule for the program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary to initiate a cost-effective program to improve the capability of the next-generation nuclear attack submarine. The amendment states that the objective of the program may be met either by establishing a separate and independent design and development effort or by incorporating new technologies into the planned fleet of Virginia-class submarines. The amendment would also require the Secretary to recommend a schedule for the program, but would remove the requirement for the program to begin procurement in fiscal year 2014.

Extension of requirements relating to management responsibility for naval mine countermeasures programs (sec. 216)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 218) that would amend section 216 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1992 and 1993 (Public Law 102-190; Public Law 102–484), as most recently amended by section 212 of the Bob Stump National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2003 (Public Law 107–314). The provision would extend the requirement for the reporting on the naval mine countermeasures programs from 2008 until 2011, and make certain other changes to the management of, and reporting on, the program. The provision would also require the Secretary of Defense to submit a plan for the sustainment of the MHC–51-class mine countermeasures ship and supporting dedicated mine countermeasures systems until the Littoral Combat Ship (LCS) and next generation mine countermeasures systems are deployed.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would remove the requirement for sustainment of the MHC-51 mine countermeasures vessels until the LCS and next generation mine countermeasures systems are deployed. Instead, the amendment would prohibit the Secretary of the Navy from decommissioning any vessel of the MHC-51 mine countermeasures class before the end of its service life, until 30 days after submitting a report on existing capabilities to assume the MHC-51 mission, and certifying that the capabilities of the MHC–51 mine countermeasures class are no longer required.

Single set of requirements for the Army and Marine Corps heavy lift rotorcraft program (sec. 217)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 219) that would prohibit a new program start for a heavy lift helicopter until the Secretary of the Army and the Secretary of the Navy develop a single, common Joint Heavy Lift (JHL) requirement approved by the Joint Requirements Oversight Council (JROC) and the Secretary of Defense.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would exclude the CH-53X Heavy Lift Replacement (HLR) program from the requirement for a single set of requirements for a heavy lift helicopter. The conferees agree that the Army and Marine Corps should jointly develop any next generation heavy lift helicopter and that the foundation of any such program must focus on a single, joint requirement validated by the JROC and approved by the Secretary of Defense. However, the conferees also understand that the Army's JHL concept is centered on a rotorcraft capable of lifting a Future Combat System platform, while the Marine Corps' HLR program is intended as a CH–53E replacement.

Requirements for development of tactical radio communications systems (sec. 218)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 220) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to provide a comprehensive report on the immediate requirements for tactical radio communications and whether these requirements may be satisfied with the purchase of legacy radios. The provision would require that the Secretary ensure that Department of Defense (DOD) users rapidly acquire tactical radio communications utilizing existing technologies or mature systems readily available in the commercial marketplace; and apply DOD Instruction 5000.2 to the Joint Tactical Radio System (JTRS) in a manner that does not permit the Milestone B entrance requirements to be waived. The provision would also give the JTRS Joint Program Executive Officer (JPEO) the authority and control of execution year research and development funding for all the clusters and the waveform developments for JTRS.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary to submit the comprehensive report, as required by the House provision, and apply DOD Instruction 5000.2 to the JTRS program unless the Secretary certifies that the Department is unable to meet critical national security objectives. The amendment would also require the head of the JPEO to certify the JTRS program of each of the services and submit a report, no later than May 1, 2006, through the Secretary, to the congressional defense committees, on the adequacy of the proposed JTRS budget and the actions taken to address any inadequacies in the proposed JTRS budgets.

The conferees have supported the JTRS program in the past, although the conferees have questioned the JTRS program structure and the inability of the Department to deliver a software programmable radio. The conferees endorse the designation of a JPEO for the JTRS program, and believe that the JPEO should have the authority to successfully manage a program of this size and cost, once the JTRS program is reevaluated and restructured by the Secretary. In the interim, the conferees agree that the JTRS JPEO should review and certify the current and proposed service JTRS budgets to ensure the programs can meet the requirements of the combatant commanders. Although the conferees encourage the Department to procure legacy radios, the conferees also believe that interim radio communication capabilities should be evolutionary and be able to transition to the long-term system solution with maximum hardware and software reuse.

Limitation on systems development and demonstration of personnel recovery vehicle (sec. 219)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 221) that would prevent the expenditure of funds for systems development and demonstration of the Personnel Recovery Vehicle (PRV) until 30 days after the Secretary of Defense submits to the congressional defense committees a certification that the requirements and schedule for the PRV have been validated by the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology, and Logistics. The provision would also require the Secretary to certify that all technologies required for the PRV are mature and demonstrated in a relevant environment, and that no other aircraft, or modification of an aircraft, in the Department of Defense can meet the requirements of the PRV. Finally, the provision would require the Secretary to provide a statement setting forth the independent cost estimate and manpower estimate for the PRV.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would allow the expenditure of no more than 40 percent of the funds made available for systems development and demonstration of the PRV pending the submission of a certification by the Secretary that the Joint Requirements and Oversight Council has validated the requirement for the PRV program and that the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology, and Logistics has validated the acquisition schedule. The amendment would also require the Secretary to provide an explanation of the reasons why the chosen PRV system would be more effective or less expensive in terms of total life-cycle costs in the event the Department chooses a PRV system not in the Department's inventory.

Limitation on VXX helicopter program (sec. 220)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 227) that would limit the obligation of research, development, test, and evaluation funds, or procurement funds, for acquisition of pilot production helicopters for the VXX helicopter program until the Secretary of the Navy certifies to the congressional defense committees that the results of the tests conducted by the fleet of test article helicopters for the VXX program demonstrate that VXX helicopters in the VXX mission configuration can be produced without significant further design modification.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would withhold 25 percent of the amount authorized to be appropriated for the system development and demonstration of the VXX helicopter until the Secretary of the Navy submits to the congressional defense committees an event-driven acquisition strategy for increment two of the VXX program that includes the completion of at least one phase of operational testing on production representative test vehicles before the initiation of aircraft production. The provision would require that the acquisition strategy be developed by the Secretary of the Navy in coordination with the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation of the Department of Defense.

The conferees strongly support the VXX program, but believe that the current program schedule for concurrent development and production of both three test articles and pilot production helicopters includes too much risk. The conferees understand that existing EH-101 test vehicles are engaged in flight activities, including engine upgrade certification tests, pilot training, mission profile evaluation, and communications suite test and evaluation. The conferees also understand that increment one pilot-production aircraft will be utilized for specific communications, mission systems, and survivability testing; and the procurement and testing of pilot-production aircraft in 2006 will help reduce the risk in increment two. The conferees believe that it would be prudent for the Department of the Navy to develop an event-driven acquisition strategy that includes (1) a list of the critical technologies required for the production and operation of increment two aircraft for the VXX executive helicopter program; (2) a schedule that accepts no more than moderate risk in either cost or schedule for the demonstration and test of each critical technology listed in the event-driven acquisition strategy; (3) a description of the event-based decision points and associated decision criteria that will occur before the initiation of production of increment two aircraft; (4) a description of a proposed operational evaluation using production representative test vehicles to occur before the initiation of production of increment two aircraft; and (5) an evaluation of the acquisition strategy provided by the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation of the Department of Defense.

Report on testing of Internet Protocol version 6 (sec. 221)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 216) that would mandate the testing of Internet Protocol version 6 (IPv6) by the Naval Research Laboratory.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to certify the adequacy of the IPv6 network. The amendment would also require the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation be responsible for the oversight of the test program. The amendment would further require the Department to submit annual reports to the congressional defense committees.

The conferees note that the recently released IPv6 Master Test Plan details a testing plan that consolidates and coordinates all planned IPv6 related testing activities across the Department to ensure that the highest priority testing requirements are addressed. The conferees direct the Department to ensure that this testing is done in an independent, systematic manner and includes rigorous, realistic, end-to-end testing of IPv6. The conferees note that the Naval Research Laboratory's Global Information Grid Evaluation Facility can perform a significant amount of this mandated testing in an effective and independent manner and should be utilized accordingly.

The conferees are also concerned that the Department has not adequately estimated the costs for the transition of Department systems to IPv6 and therefore has not budgeted for these costs. The conferees note that the Department did not include the overall cost estimates required by section 331 of the Ronald W. Reagan National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2005 (Public Law 108-375) in the IPv6 Transition Plan, although the plan did note that "the availability of 'new' dollars to support IPv6 transition is not expected". Therefore, the conferees direct the Director of the Congressional Budget Office to provide a realistic estimate by service and agency for the cost of completing the conversion of Department systems to IPv6, and report the results to the congressional defense committees no later than January 1, 2007.

Subtitle C—Missile Defense Programs

Report on capabilities and costs for operational boost/ascent-phase missile defense systems (sec. 231)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 231) that would require the Secretary of Defense to conduct an assessment of the missile defense programs, which are designed to protect against boost/ascent-phase ballistic missile attacks, and to submit a report to the congressional defense committees by October 1, 2006.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

One-year extension of Comptroller General assessments of ballistic missile defense programs (sec. 232)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 221) that would extend until fiscal year 2007 the requirement for the Comptroller General to provide an assessment of ballistic missile defense programs.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Fielding of ballistic missile defense capabilities (sec. 233)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 222) that would authorize the use of funds, authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 2006 or 2007 for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Missile Defense Agency, for the development and fielding of ballistic missile defense capabilities.

The House contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Plans for test and evaluation of operational capability of the ballistic missile defense system (sec. 234)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 223) that would direct the appropriate operational test and evaluation components of the Department of Defense, in coordination with the Missile Defense Agency, to prepare a plan to test, evaluate, and characterize the operational capability of each block of the missile defense system.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Subtitle D—High-Performance Defense Manufacturing Technology Research and Development

High-performance defense manufacturing technology research and development (secs. 241-245)

The Senate amendment contained a set of provisions (secs. 231-235) that would direct the Department of Defense to undertake research and development on innovative manufacturing processes and disseminate those processes into the defense industrial base.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would establish a pilot program to develop innovative manufacturing processes and disseminate them into industry.

The conferees believe that rapidly developing technology coupled with an increasingly competitive global economic and security environment makes the importance of maintaining a robust domestic manufacturing base a continuing national security concern. The conferees note that the Defense Manufacturing Technology (ManTech) program is a transformational program intended to keep the defense manufacturing base on the cutting edge of innovative processes and technologies. The conferees believe that a reinvigorated ManTech program could lead to a stronger defense manufacturing base and enhance our national security.

Subtitle E—Other Matters

Comptroller General report on program element structure for research, development, test, and evaluation projects (sec. 251)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 222) that would require the Department of Defense to assign a separate program element for each research, development, test, and evaluation (RDT&E) project with estimated expenditures and proposed appropriations of $100.0 million or more over the future years defense program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would direct the Comptroller General to conduct a study of the current program element structure.

The conferees recognize the need for flexibility in planning and managing complex RDT&E programs and projects. The program element (PE) structure used to budget and allocate resources to RDT&E projects was created over 4 decades ago and has not been recently evaluated or updated. Congress has required incremental adjustments to the budget detail presented by the Department to ensure proper oversight, but has become increasingly frustrated with the incorrect application of directives in the classification of programs and projects by budget activity, the addition of large new projects under existing PEs, the resulting lack of transparency in planning and budgeting, and reduced visibility into sub-elements and projects.

The study should include an analysis of the current structure and content and an assessment of the effectiveness of program element and budget justification materials in providing necessary data for congressional oversight and budget transparency. These recommendations should balance the needs of Congress, other governmental organizations, and the public to ensure visibility into the Department's budgets and programs with the need for the Department to retain sufficient management flexibility. The report should include: (1) recommendations on program element size and content; (2) budget justification material content; (3) appropriate reprogramming authorities within and between program elements; and (4) recommendations regarding the structure of program elements as they relate to highly complex research and development programs, particularly those that employ the system of systems concept. The report should be submitted to the congressional defense committees no later than February 1, 2007, with potential implementation in the fiscal year 2009 budget submission.

Research and development efforts for purposes of small business research (sec. 252)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 223) that would establish a pilot program to expand the role of small business concerns in defense acquisition.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 814) that would revise criteria and procedures for identification of Small Business Innovation Research (SBIR) topic areas and establish a Commercialization Pilot Program to accelerate transition of SBIR programs into the acquisition process.

The House recedes with an amendment that would modify the reporting requirement of this provision.

Revised requirements relating to submission of Joint Warfighting Science and Technology plan (sec. 253)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 224) that would require submission of the Joint Warfighting Science and Technology plan to Congress every 2 years, rather than annually, and would repeal the requirement for the plan to contain technology area review and assessment summaries.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 1041).

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require submission of the technology area review and assessment upon completion.

Report on efficiency of naval shipbuilding industry (sec. 254)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 225) that would require the Secretary of the Navy to establish a program, and to provide funds that are made available to: (1) qualified applicants to facilitate and develop innovative design and production technologies and processes for naval vessels and the development of modernized shipbuilding infrastructure; and (2) private shipyards to facilitate their acquisition of such technologies, processes, and infrastructure. The provision would outline the purpose of the program, how the development funding could be applied for, how the participating entities would be selected, and how the shipyards would incorporate the technologies or processes. The provision would also require the Secretary to conduct an assessment of certain shipbuilding phases at least annually. The provision would provide $100.0 million from the Research, Development, Test, and Evaluation, Navy, account in fiscal year 2006 to establish this program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary to conduct an assessment of the U.S. naval shipbuilding industry to determine how worldwide shipbuilding industry best practices for innovation, design, and production technologies, processes, and infrastructure could be adopted. The amendment would require the assessment to identify those best practices that have not been adopted by the U.S. naval shipbuilding industry; estimate the costs to adopt and the return on investment by adopting these best practices; and any recommendations the Secretary may have to increase naval shipbuilding efficiencies. The amendment would require this assessment to occur subsequent to, and take into consideration the results of, the study of the cost effectiveness of the Navy shipbuilding program required by section 1014 of the Ronald W. Reagan National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2005 (Public Law 108–375). The amendment would require the Secretary to submit a report to the congressional defense committees by April 1, 2006, which would include the Secretary's findings and conclusions based on this assessment.

Technology transition (sec. 255)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 242) that would clarify the role of the Technology Transition Council.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment that would ensure that the required report includes an assessment of the Department Defense requirements, budgeting and planning process on technology transition and modify the deadline for submission of the report to not later than 9 months after the enactment of this Act.

Prevention, mitigation, and treatment of blast injuries (sec. 256)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 243) that would require the Secretary of Defense to designate an executive agent to coordinate and manage a comprehensive blast injury prevention, mitigation, and treatment program. The provision would require review and assessment of a coordinated, department-wide research effort to include: blast characterization; modeling and simulation of safe stand-off distances; explosive detect and defeat capabilities; and armor design and material testing for blast, ballistic, and fire protection. The provision would also require support for emerging military medical technologies, devices, and treatments specific to blast injuries including traumatic brain injury.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would revise the responsibilities of the executive agent required by this section. The amendment would also require the Director, Defense Research and Engineering to work in coordination with the executive agent and the Director, Joint Improvised Explosive Device Task Force on research for the prevention and mitigation of blast injuries.

The conferees intend to ensure a focused effort on providing the best treatment and protection for U.S. soldiers, sailors, airmen, marines, and National Guardsmen as they confront evolving threats in unpredictable environments. The Department of Defense acquisition system should incorporate emerging health hazards data produced by efforts under this section into the human systems integration assessments conducted for all acquisition programs.

Modification of requirements for annual report on DARPA program to award cash prizes for advanced technology achievements (sec. 257)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 244) that would clarify reporting requirements on utilization of authority granted by the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2000 (Public Law 106–65) to run competitions and award prizes for achievements in research and technology development.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with technical amendments.

Designation of facilities and resources constituting the major range and test facility base (sec. 258)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 245) that would update the Bob Stump National Defense Authorization Act of Fiscal Year 2003 (Public Law 107–314) to reflect changes in the Test Resource Management Center oversight of major research and test facilities. The provision would designate the Secretary of Defense, rather than the Director, Operational Test and Evaluation, as the official in charge of major range and test facility designations.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Report on cooperation between Department of Defense and National Aeronautics and Space Administration on research, development, test, and evaluation activities (sec. 259)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 246) that would require a joint Department of Defense and National Aeronautics and Space Administration assessment of research, development, test, and evaluation cooperation.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would ensure that the assessment of space access and operations includes a focus on responsive space launch and small satellite development.

Delayed effective date for limitation on procurement of systems not GPS-equipped (sec. 260)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 247) that would delay the effective date by which the military services must complete equipping their forces with the global positioning system (GPS) from 2005 to 2007.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

The conferees recognize that the Department of Defense is still working toward compliance with section 152(b) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994 (Public Law 103–160) with regard to equipping all aircraft, ships, armored vehicles, and indirect fire systems with GPS capability. The current program calls for Army compliance by the end of fiscal year 2007 and for Air Force compliance in fiscal year 2015. The conferees believe there may not be value added to modifying certain platforms currently planned for modification after 2007. Therefore, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to perform an assessment of all Department of Defense aircraft, ships, armored vehicles, and indirect fire system that will not be equipped with GPS capability by the end of fiscal year 2007 to determine whether the operational value of modifying each system with GPS is worth the cost of so doing. A report of the results of this assessment is due to the congressional defense committees by February 1, 2007.

Report on development and use of robotics and unmanned ground vehicle systems (sec. 261)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 248) that would require a report on the development and utilization of robotics and unmanned ground vehicle systems.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to expand and clarify the requirements of the report.

The conferees note that the Joint Robotics Program (JRP) produces a Joint Robotics Program Master Plan that details JRP activities, progress, and budgets. The conferees intend for the report required by this provision to expand on the JRP effort to include a detailed description of all the relevant robotics and unmanned ground vehicle efforts undertaken by all of the elements of the Department of Defense, as well as other required elements indicated in the provision.

The conferees continue to support the goal established by the Floyd D. Spence National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2001 (Public Law 106–398) that, by 2015, one-third of operational ground combat vehicles be unmanned. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to provide a cost estimate for research, development, testing, and procurement to achieve this goal along with the submission of a report to the congressional defense committees not later than 9 months after the enactment of this Act, as required by this provision.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees are concerned with the Navy's plans to fund the construction of academic research vessels in the basic research account in fiscal year 2007. While the Ocean-class research vessel provides the Navy with a robust understanding of its battlespace, diversion of fundamental science funds to design and construct such ships would adversely affect the goals of the innovative research account and is an inappropriate use for scarce Navy basic research funds. The conferees direct the Navy to fund design work for future ships in PE 63564N, the Ship Preliminary Design and Feasibility Studies program.

Released with the fiscal year 2006 budget request, the fiscal year 2007 budget projection included $25.0 million for UNOLS ship construction. The conferees direct the Navy to request ship construction funds in the Shipbuilding and Conversion, Navy (SCN) account. The committee expects that the Navy will continue to use the SCN account to provide for the recapitalization of Ocean-class research vessels in the future-years defense program.

Finally, the conferees direct the Navy to update its plan for renewal of the UNOLS fleet to reflect current fiscal realities, schedules, missions, and research priorities. The updated plan should be submitted to the congressional defense committees no later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Unjustified base support cost growth

The budget request included $2,286.5 million for Air Force base support programs.

The House bill would authorize a decrease of $82.6 million from Air Force base support programs, including a $65.0 million decrease in base services related supplies and materials.

The Senate amendment would authorize the budget request.

The conferees agree to authorize a decrease of $80.0 million for Air Force base support programs.

The conferees acknowledge the need for force enablers such as mess attendants, gymnasiums, and libraries and are aware of the impact these services have on quality of life. However, the conferees believe that tripling funding in order to replace gym equipment such as cardio machines and food service items such as silverware and cooking utensils is unjustified.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 312).

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would clarify that in those instances where the property is disposed of pursuant to a base closure law, the sole source of funds for environmental restoration services under section 2701(d)(1), title 10, United States Code, would be the base closure account until the closure of the applicable base closure account. Other Department environmental remediation accounts would become the source of funding for such cleanups after the base closure account has been closed.

The conferees also direct the Secretary to provide a report on proposed congressional budget exhibits for Navy mission-funded shipyards by March 1, 2006.

The provision also commends the Air Force for its implementation of the Depot Maintenance Strategy and Master Plan, particularly the commitment to invest $150.0 million per year for 6 years to modernize its depots. Finally, the provision encourages the Air Force to maintain that commitment throughout the 6-year period, which ends in 2009.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would delete reference to specific funding figures, and instead encourage the Air Force to remain committed to the process improvement initiatives and the investment and recapitalization projects contained in the Depot Maintenance Strategy and Master Plan.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 331) that would extend, for an additional 3 years, a program by which the Defense Logistics Agency could provide logistics support and services to a contractor in support of its performance on a contract for the construction, modification, or maintenance of a weapons system. The Secretary of Defense has not finalized the required program regulations. The current authority expires on September 30, 2007. Moving the expiration date to 2010 would correspond to the originally envisioned 5-year pilot period.

The Senate amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 326).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Extension of period for reimbursement for certain protective, safety, or health equipment purchased by or for members of the Armed Forces deployed in contingency operations (sec. 332)

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would extend the period during which equipment eligible for reimbursement could be purchased from July 31, 2004, until April 1, 2006.

The conferees urge the Department of Defense to expand the list of eligible items published on October 4, 2005, to include deltoid or side plate body armor, gloves, and knee or elbow pads, to the extent those items meet the requirements of this Act.

Subtitle E—Outsourcing

Public-private competition (sec. 341)

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary to prescribe guidelines and procedures to ensure that consideration is given to using federal government employees for work that would otherwise be performed under Department of Defense contracts, but could be performed by federal government employees. The conferees expect these guidelines to provide for the assignment of work to federal government employees (and for hiring new federal government employees) in appropriate circumstances, without the requirement to perform public-private competition under Office of Management and Budget Circular A-76 or any other provision of law or regulation.

Extension of temporary authority for contractor performance of security guard functions (sec. 344)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 332) that would extend by 2 years the authority for contractor performance of security guard functions under section 332 of the Bob Stump National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2003 (Public Law 107–314), and require the Secretary of Defense and the secretaries of the military departments to conduct new full and open competitions pursuant to section 2304 of title 10, United States Code, for security guard requirements under this section.

The Secretary would submit to Congress, not later than January 1, 2006, a report on this assessment. The provision would also require the Comptroller General to submit to Congress a review of the Secretary of the Army's assessment not later than 120 days after receipt of the Secretary of the Army's report.

The report would also include an assessment of the impact on military readiness caused by such incursions. This provision would also require the Secretary of Defense to submit to Congress semi-annual reports on mitigation measures implemented since the previous report.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the assessment of the impact of undocumented immigrant incursions into training areas on military readiness to be made only by the Secretary of Defense, not the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Homeland Security jointly. The amendment would also change the date the initial report is due to Congress to April 15, 2006.

Report regarding Management of Army Lodging (sec. 355)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 358) that would require the Secretary of Defense to report to Congress on the results of a study evaluating the merits of allowing the Army and Air Force Exchange System (AAFES) to manage Army lodging. The Army would also be prohibited from soliciting qualifications that would privatize Army lodging beyond Group A until the Secretary's report was submitted to Congress.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require two reports, one by the Secretary of the Army evaluating the merits of privatization of Army lodging, and one by the Army and Air Force Exchange Service commenting on the feasibility of its participation in privatization of Army lodging. The amendment requires two additional elements in each report: the potential costs and benefits of each approach, and the number of Army lodging personnel that would be impacted and the total personnel-related costs which would occur as a result of either approach.

The conferees believe that AAFES should be allowed fair consideration in any competitive procurement of lodging management and services within the Department of Defense.

The provision would also require a report on this study to the congressional defense committees not later than February 1, 2006.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would change the date of the report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives to 270 days after the date of enactment of this Act. The amendment would also require an assessment of the cost and the feasibility of adapting defense fueling infrastructure to handle biodiesel and ethanol.

The conferees encourage the Secretary to make use of previously available reports and data, where feasible, to complete the assessment of commercial biodiesel and ethanol fuel availability and other appropriate elements of this study.

Report on effects of windmill farms on military readiness (sec. 358)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 346) that would make a congressional finding regarding a report from the Ministry of Defence of the United Kingdom on the effect of windmill farms on military readiness. The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would recognize that the Department of Defense has developed and is already executing a program to improve its joint and interagency stability operations planning, exercises, and operational capabilities. As a result, a single field experiment in fiscal year 2006 does not appear to be required. The conferees urge the Department to more fully incorporate other federal departments and agencies, as well as allies and coalition partners. The amendment would require that the Department report on the progress and findings of the joint field training and experimentation conducted in fiscal years 2005 and 2006 not later than February 1, 2007.

Reports on budgeting relating to sustainment of key military equipment (sec. 361)

Safety modifications will not require waivers.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 842).

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would prohibit expenditures greater than $100,000 for equipment modifications or greater than $1.0 million if the equipment will be removed, refurbished, and installed on another platform prior to the disposal of an aircraft, weapon, ship, or other item of equipment, unless the requirement is waived.

The provision would authorize periodic Comptroller General audits of gifts accepted under this authority. The authority would expire on December 31, 2007.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that, in addition to gifts of real and personal property and money, would authorize the Secretary to accept gifts of services made on the condition that they be used for the benefit of members of the Armed Forces and civilian employees of the Department of Defense (and their dependents or survivors). Gifts from foreign governments or international organizations could only be accepted if they are not designated for a specific individual and could not include services. The amendment would authorize the establishment of a Department of Defense General Gift Fund.

The conferees, by adding authority to accept gifts to benefit certain members, dependents, and civilian employees, do not intend to limit the existing general gift authority.

The conferees applaud this effort and encourage the Department of Labor and the Department of Defense to continue such collaboration in order to leverage their individual and combined resources to strengthen the quality of life for members of the Armed Forces and their families.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1109) that would provide legal standing for certain representatives of civilian employees in public-private competitions.

The conference report does not include either provision.

The conferees believe that to ensure public-private competitions are conducted as fairly, effectively, and efficiently as possible, both Department of Defense civilian employees (or their representatives) and contractors (or their representatives) should receive fair treatment throughout the competition regarding access to relevant information and legal standing to challenge the way a competition has been conducted.

The conferees note that this issue was specifically addressed in section 326 of the Ronald W. Reagan National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2005 (Public Law 108–375). The conferees believe that there is insufficient data on the implementation of section 326 to determine whether changes to that provision are needed, or would be appropriate.

The Senate recedes.

The conference outcome is reflected in the tables of this report in Operation and Maintenance, Navy.

The conferees note that the Navy currently is conducting a human resources benefit call center pilot program in Machias, Maine. Navy officials have stated that the pilot program is "very successful" in delivering high customer satisfaction. Because of this success, the Navy intends to transition this call center to a permanent program. This is largely due to the hard work and commitment to excellence of the personnel who work at the call center in Machias.

Pilot project on compatible use buffers on real property bordering Fort Carson, Colorado

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 312) that would require the Secretary of Defense to carry out a pilot project at Fort Carson, Colorado, to evaluate the effectiveness of conservation easements and leases entered into with willing entities to limit property development that would be incompatible with Fort Carson's mission. Conservation easements and leases are currently authorized under section 2684a of title 10, United States Code.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees have added $20.0 million to the Readiness and Environmental Protection Initiative to support the Department of Defense's highest priority buffer zone projects. The conferees expect the Secretary of Defense to enter into agreements with wiliing entities to prevent or limit the use of property in the vicinity of a military installation that would impede the mission of that military installation. The conferees believe that the Secretary of Defense, in coordination with the Secretary of the Army, should utilize available authority and funding to ensure that conservation easements and leases are entered into as quickly as possible at the high-priority sites identified as part of the Army's Compatible Use Buffer Program, including Fort Campbell; Fort Carson; Fort A. P. Hill; Fort Hood; Fort Sill; and Camp Ripley. With respect to Fort Carson, Colorado, the conferees understand that Fort Carson is one of the Army's highest priority sites for implementation of compatible use buffer zones.

Point of Maintenance/Arsenal/Depot AIT Initiative

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 335) that would authorize $10.0 million for the Point of Maintenance/Arsenal/Depot AIT (AD–AIT) Initiative.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conference outcome is reflected in the tables of this report in Operation and Maintenance, Army.

Provision of Department of Defense support for certain paralympic sporting events

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 353) that would amend section 2564 of title 10, United States Code, to exempt certain paralympic sporting events conducted in the United States, its territories, or commonwealths, from prescribed conditions for Department of Defense-provided security and safety assistance. These conditions would include determinations that such security and safety needs cannot reasonably be met by other sources and, if provided, would not adversely affect military preparedness of the Armed Forces. Additionally, requesting organizations must agree to provide reimbursement. Under the provision, up to $1.0 million could be expended in any fiscal year to provide support for qualifying paralympic sporting events.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 338) that would provide funding from the Support for International Sporting Competitions (SISC) Defense account, which was established by section 5802 of the Omnibus Consolidated Appropriations Act, 1997 (Public Law 104–208).

The conference agreement does not include these provisions.

The conferees support Department-provided security and safety assistance to qualifying sporting events and endorse participation by eligible military personnel and veterans in paralympic sporting events. A separate provision in this Act amends section 717 of title 10, United States Code, to specifically authorize members of the Armed Forces to train for, attend, and participate in the Paralympic Games. The conferees note that the quadrennial Paralympic Games are already exempted from certification and reimbursement requirements in connection with the use of the SISC account funds. However, the need for, and impact of, expansion of Department support for events of this type are not clear. The average annual number of events of this type, the anticipated size of events of this type, and the associated scope of assistance requested from the Department under this expanded authority could not be determined. Consequently, no assessment of the resulting increase to the personnel tempo of both active and reserve component forces could be made.

The conferees, therefore, direct the Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the U.S. Olympic Committee, to identify and submit a report to the congressional defense committees by August 31, 2006, detailing the effect of amending section 2564 of title 10, United States Code, to include the Paralympic Military Program and paralympic sporting events, at various participation levels, in the category of events that would qualify for Department support without having to meet the conditions in subsections (a) and (b) of that section.

This report shall include an analysis of: (1) the estimated number of events that would qualify for nonreimbursable assistance; (2) the impact of such increased Department support on the operational or personnel tempo of active duty, guard, and reserve forces; (3) the type and scope of assistance that is likely to be needed or requested outside the realm of security and safety; (4) the estimated annual cost to the Department for such assistance; (5) whether support for such events would constitute appropriate inactive duty training; (6) whether Department support for such events should be contingent on the participation of current or former military personnel as athletes; and (7) whether Department support for such events should be contingent on the size of the event based on a minimum level of participation.

Report on aircraft to perform High-Altitude Aviation Training Site

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 337) that would require the Secretary of the Army to submit a report to the congressional defense committees that contains an evaluation on the type of aircraft available in the Army inventory that is most suited to perform the High-Altitude Aviation Training Site (HAATS) mission, and a determination of when such aircraft may be available for assignment to the HAATS.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees are aware that the HAATS at Eagle, Colorado is the primary site for training military aviators on operations in all season weather conditions in hostile, high altitude, power limited environments. The training site currently uses UH–1 Huey and OH–58 Kiowa aircraft that are being phased out of the inventory within the future-years defense program. The conferees are aware that the Secretary of the Army has begun an evaluation of the Army inventory and aircraft availability to determine the most appropriate schedule for assigning suitable aircraft to HAATS. The conferees look forward to delivery of the report of this evaluation to the congressional defense committees no later than December 15, 2005.

The House bill also contained a provision (sec. 1521(b)) that would increase the minimum active-duty end strengths for the Army by 30,000 to 512,400, and for the Marine Corps by 4,000 to 179,000.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 402) that would establish minimum active-duty end strengths for the Army, 522,400, and for the Marine Corps, 178,000. Minimum end strengths for the Navy and Air Force would be identical to those in the House provision.

The House provision would also authorize increases of active-duty end strength for the Marine Corps of the number otherwise authorized by law for fiscal year 2006, plus up to 5,000 for each fiscal year 2007 through 2009.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with a technical amendment.

SUBTITLE B—RESERVE FORCES

End strengths for Selected Reserve (sec. 411)

The Senate amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 411).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

The conferees recommend end strength levels for the Selected Reserve for fiscal year 2006 as set forth in the following table:

End strengths for reserves on active duty in support of the reserves (sec. 412)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 412) that would authorize the following end strengths for reserves on active duty in support of the reserves as of September 30, 2006: the Army National Guard of the United States, 27,345; the Army Reserve, 15,270; the Naval Reserve, 13,392; the Marine Corps Reserve, 2,261; the Air National Guard of the United States, 13,089; and the Air Force Reserve, 2,290.

The conferees would expect that the certification requirement for reserve component rapid assessment element teams under section 12310(c)(5) of title 10, United States Code, would be met by the Secretary of Defense before any of these teams would be used to respond to a weapons of mass destruction or terrorist emergency.

The conferees would also expect that the creation of any additional NG CERFP teams would be subject to specific congressional authorization and a corresponding adjustment to the end strengths of reserves on active duty in support of the reserves authorized by law.

TITLE V—MILITARY PERSONNEL POLICY

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Department of Defense Policy on Transportation of Military Remains

The conferees are aware that, pursuant to Department of Defense policy, the remains of military personnel, when air transport is necessary, are transported with an assigned escort officer by commercial airlines from Dover Air Force Base to their hometowns. The remains of our military men and women should be transported with the utmost ceremony, honors, and respect, and the conferees believe that examination of this issue with an eye toward improvement is called for. The conferees direct the Secretary to establish a system that would ensure that upon arrival at the ultimate destination, the flag-draped coffin is removed and that appropriate military honors are rendered by a small honor guard. The conferees believe that use of military aircraft for transportation of deceased members may be a preferable means of transportation and direct the Secretary to submit a report, no later than February 1, 2006, discussing the feasibility of such a requirement. The conferees believe that for those who make our freedom possible, this final honor is reasonable and justified by their sacrifice.

Assistance to local educational agencies that benefit dependents of members of the Armed Forces and Department of Defense civilian employees (sec. 572)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 562(a)) that would authorize $50.0 million in Operation and Maintenance, Defense-wide activities, for assistance to eligible local educational agencies that provide education to military dependent children. The House bill also contained a provision (562(b)) that would authorize $10.0 million in Operation and Maintenance, Defense-wide activities, for eligible local educational agencies experiencing enrollment changes in military dependent children due to base closures, force structure changes, and force relocations.

The Senate amendment contained two similar provisions (secs. 582 and 583).

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would authorize $30.0 million for assistance to local educational agencies that benefit dependents of members of the Armed Forces and Department of Defense civilian employees. The amendment also would authorize $10.0 million in Operation and Maintenance, Defense-wide activities, to assist communities that experience enrollment changes in the number of military and Department of Defense dependent children due to global rebasing, creation or activation of new military units, realignment of forces as a result of the base closure process, or a change in the number of housing units on a military installation. The amendment establishes a limitation of $1.0 million on the amount that any eligible local educational agency may receive in any fiscal year, and extends the authority for assistance under this section for 5 years.

The conferees note that the Base Realignment and Closure (BRAC) round of 2005, in addition to impacting military installations around the country, will have significant impact on surrounding civilian communities including local school systems.

The quality of life for military families is significantly impacted by the quality of public education available to their children. In light of the anticipated increases in school-aged children in some cases resulting from Department of Defense initiated actions, the conferees believe that the Department should work closely with impacted States and local communities, as well as the Department of Education, to proactively address the influx, and the requirement for adequate facilities and resources to properly provide for the education needs of military children.

The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives no later than 6 months after the enactment of this Act that examines Department of Defense installations that have gained or are expected to gain military students over the period of 2004 through 2011 as a result of BRAC, rebasing, force restructuring, or change in the number of military housing units, and addresses the following: (1) the number of students that have been or are expected to be gained at those installations; (2) a plan for how the Department will work collaboratively with other federal agencies as well as local and state education agencies to ensure that military children have access to sufficient educational resources and facilities when they arrive at one of the new, highly impacted installations listed above; and (3) a list of possible funding resources, including federal grants, available to local education agencies to assist in funding the necessary construction, expansion, and additional teachers that will be required to accommodate significant increases in students due to Department of Defense initiated actions.

Impact aid for children with severe disabilities (sec. 573)

Spence National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal year 2001 (Public Law 106–398).

Continuation of impact aid assistance on behalf of dependents of certain members despite change in status of member (sec. 574)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 563) that would adjust the process for computing the amount of funding provided by the Department of Education to certain local educational agencies heavily impacted by dependents of military personnel for the school year 2005–2006. The adjustment would require that children who attend the school, but no longer live on a military base because both parents are deployed or children who temporarily reside in military housing following the death of a military parent, continue to be counted as a child enrolled in school when computing average daily attendance for the purposes of determining the amount of assistance received.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

In order to facilitate this requirement, the Senate provision would repeal two previously enacted legislative provisions that could delay implementation and are no longer required.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Department to prescribe new regulations as soon as practicable after the date of enactment of this Act but no later than March 31, 2006.

Consumer education for members of the Armed Forces and their spouses on insurance and other financial services (sec. 578)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 598) that would require the services to carry out comprehensive programs of consumer education for members and their spouses on insurance and other financial services that are available to members and routinely offered by private sector sources. The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would express a sense of Congress that the Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Secretary of Homeland Security, should study the options among public and private educational institutions and facilities, including an option of using the National Defense University, for providing strategic-level homeland defense education and related research to civilian and military leaders from all agencies of government in order to contribute to the development of a common understanding of homeland defense principles and of effective interagency homeland defense strategies, doctrines, and processes. The results of such consultation and study should be reported to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives, together with such recommendations as the Secretary of Defense considers appropriate, including a request for implementing legislation that would contribute to the development of strategic-level homeland defense education.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Administrative censures of members of the Armed Forces

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 554) that would codify the authority of the Secretary of Defense and the service secretaries to issue administrative censures in writing to members of the Armed Forces. An administrative censure is a statement of adverse opinion or criticism with respect to the conduct or performance of duty by a military member. Such administrative censures are not subject to appeal and are final when issued.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees note that the Secretary of Defense and the Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force possess inherent authority, wholly apart from the provisions of the Uniform Code of Military Justice, to administratively censure members of the Armed Forces when facts and circumstances so require. While the conferees believe that codification of the authority to administratively censure is not required, it is important that senior civilian and military leaders who are responsible for ensuring accountability in the aftermath of failures and deficiencies in performance by military personnel understand the availability of this authority and use it when warranted.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees are grateful for the enormous contributions of reservists and National Guardsmen in prosecuting the global war on terrorism. The central role of the reserve components in Operations Noble Eagle, Enduring Freedom, and Iraqi Freedom have demonstrated the critical importance of transformation of the reserve components aimed at establishing a flexible continuum of service that will allow the nation's citizen-soldiers to continue to perform vital missions in the Armed Forces while successfully pursuing civilian careers. A key element in achieving success in this regard is a reserve retirement system that enhances mobilization readiness, supports recruiting and retention, and equitably rewards those who serve on active duty for extended periods, particularly volunteers.

The Commission on the National Guard and Reserves, established by section 513 of the Ronald W. Reagan National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2005 (Public Law 108-375) has been established and is currently at work. The conferees expect the commission, consistent with its charter, to closely examine issues relating to the eligibility age for receipt of retired pay and to recommend alternatives that recognize the role of the National Guard and reserve and that may create new incentives for ready reservists to volunteer for active service, thereby materially contributing to military readiness and enhanced mission capability.

Up to $10.0 million in any fiscal year of funds available to the Army for multiyear purposes in appropriations for Research, Development, Test, and Evaluation, and for procurement, would be authorized to be transferred to a reserve component military personnel account in the amounts necessary to reimburse that account for the costs of military pay and allowances of reservists participating in this program.

The conferees believe that a comprehensive assessment of the SBP program is needed. In a separate provision in this report, the Comptroller General is directed to study the SBP including assessments of the implications for the actuarial soundness of recent SBP legislative changes and projected required levels of government contributions and payments to the SBP program, and an assessment of the implications of permitting SBP program participants to designate a new insurable interest beneficiary if a previously designated beneficiary predeceases them and of repealing the required reduction of the monthly SBP annuity by dependency and indemnity compensation.

Revision to eligibility for nonregular service retirement after establishing eligibility for regular retirement

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 652) that would allow service members who are qualified for active duty retirement to continue to serve in an active reserve status and remain eligible for a reserve retirement at age 60 without being required to be formally retired under the applicable active duty authority as required by current law.

The provision would require the Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture, to pay members who were producers of quota tobacco for at least 2 of the 3 tobacco market years before 2002 an amount equal to 70 percent of the difference between the amount the member will receive under the Act and the amount the member would have likely received had the member remained a full-time producer of quota tobacco and had not been ordered to active duty.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees recognize that certain mobilized reservists, who are full-time tobacco farmers and tobacco quota holders, may have been precluded from qualifying under the Fair and Equitable Tobacco Reform Act of 2004 for benefits as a result of their active duty service. The conferees believe that every effort should be made to fairly compensate reserve and National Guard members whose military service adversely affected their standing under the tobacco reform program. The conferees urge the Secretary of Agriculture, in consultation with the Secretary of Defense, to take appropriate action to develop a means to assure equitable treatment of qualifying members of the reserve and National Guard.

TITLE VII—HEALTH CARE PROVISIONS

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Plan to expedite authorization for use of medical products in an avian or pandemic influenza emergency

The conferees note that the Project BioShield Act of 2004 (Public Law 108-276) provides a framework for authorizing the emergency use of medical products that are not approved by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) or the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS). The conferees further note that avian and pandemic influenza are an emerging threat to military personnel, dependents of military personnel on military installations, and civilian personnel within the Department of Defense. Currently, no FDA approved vaccine for avian influenza is available.

Consequently, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense, in coordination with the Secretary of Health and Human Services, to submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives not later than May 1, 2006, a plan to expedite authorization for use of unapproved medical products in an avian or pandemic influenza emergency with respect to military personnel, dependents of military personnel on military installations, and civilian personnel within the Department of Defense.

The plan shall include the following: (1) identification of each element of the Department of Defense that will be responsible for carrying out the plan to expedite authorization for emergency use of medical products; (2) a statement of how and under what circumstances the Department of Defense and the Military Vaccine Agency in particular would collaborate with the Department of Health and Human Services regarding the preparation of the documents to support the filing of an Emergency Use Authorization for the H5N1 influenza vaccine or vaccines for other strains of avian or pandemic influenza; (3) a statement of how the Secretary of Health and Human Services is evaluating the "Criteria For Issuance Authorization" (detailed in Public Law 108–276 §564c; title 21 U.S.C. §360bbb-3c) in advance of a declared pandemic influenza emergency; (4) a statement of how and under what circumstances the Secretary of Health and Human Services would plan to expedite approval of diagnostic tools required for responding to a pandemic avian influenza emergency; (5) a statement of how the Secretary of Health and Human Services is monitoring and reviewing, the emergency use authorization, emerging technologies that can rapidly evaluate, analyze, identify, and treat novel and emerging viruses; and (6) a statement of how and under what circumstances the Department of Defense would execute the authorities provided under the Project BioShield Act of 2004 (Public Law 108–276; title 21 U.S.C. §360bbb-3) to expedite authorization for emergency use of medical products to respond to an avian or pandemic influenza emergency.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A—Improvements to Health Benefits for Reserves

Enhancement of TRICARE Reserve Select Program (sec. 701)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 703) that would authorize enhancements to the TRICARE Reserve Select Program for members of the Selected Reserve who have served on extended active duty since September 11, 2001, and who commit to continued service in the Selected Reserve, as authorized in section 701 of the Ronald W. Reagan National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2005 (Public Law 108-375). The provision would:

(1) allow an eligible member to accumulate earned coverage under TRICARE Reserve Select, if recalled to active duty before the period of health care coverage for which the member is eligible terminates, and complete each period of coverage consecutively;

(2) allow a member of the Selected Reserve who is enrolled in TRICARE Reserve Select and who is separated from service involuntarily, to include involuntary retirement, to complete a period of health care coverage under TRICARE Reserve Select after separation from service;

(3) authorize the Secretary of Defense to establish special circumstances under which members of the Individual Ready Reserve would qualify for enrollment in TRICARE Reserve Select;

(4) allow a member of the Individual Ready Reserve who is unable to find a position in the Selected Reserve and who is otherwise eligible for coverage under this section a period of 1 year in which to find a position in the Selected Reserve, during which the member's eligibility is retained, but coverage would not begin until the member becomes a member of the Selected Reserve;

(5) authorize 6 months of extended health care coverage for family members following the death of a reserve member; and

(6) allow a member 120 days after release from active duty to elect participation in TRICARE Reserve Select.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would allow eligible members of the Selected Reserve to consecutively complete earned periods of TRICARE coverage; allow a member of the Individual Ready Reserve to retain eligibility for coverage for 1 year while finding a position in the Selected Reserve; authorize 6 months of extended health care coverage for family members following the death of a reserve member; and allow 90 days after release from active duty for an eligible member of the Selected Reserve to elect participation in TRICARE Reserve Select.

Expanded eligibility of members of the Selected Reserve under the TRICARE program (sec. 702)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 705) that would expand eligibility for nearly all members of the Selected Reserve to enroll in TRICARE Standard while in a non-active duty status, whether or not the member had served on extended active duty in support of a contingency. The member would pay a premium equal to 28 percent of the annual premium established by the Secretary of Defense as the basis for such coverage.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would authorize TRICARE Standard coverage for all members of the Selected Reserve, and their families, who commit to continued service in the Selected Reserve. The amendment would also set the level of government subsidy based on new categories of eligibility.

The amendment, combined with enhancements to TRICARE Reserve Select authorized elsewhere in this Act, would establish a multi-tier TRICARE benefit. The highest tier of TRICARE coverage would be for reserves who have served on extended periods of active duty in support of a contingency operation since September 11, 2001, and who commit to continued service in the Selected Reserve.

The amendment would expand eligibility for government-subsidized TRICARE coverage by creating two additional tiers of coverage. One new tier of coverage would authorize members of the Selected Reserve who are not eligible for coverage under TRICARE Reserve Select and who receive unemployment compensation or who do not have access to employer-provided insurance to obtain coverage under the Standard option of TRICARE while in a non-active duty status. The member would pay 50 percent of the annual premium established by the Secretary for such coverage. The coverage would be available as long as the member continues to serve in the Selected Reserve, and would include all benefits of the TRICARE Standard option, including access to military treatment facilities on a space-available basis.

The amendment would further authorize a third tier of coverage for members of the Selected Reserve in a non-active duty status who, though they have not served on extended active duty in support of a contingency and have access to employer-provided health care coverage, elect coverage under TRICARE Standard. In this instance, the member would pay 85 percent of the annual premium established by the Secretary and coverage would be available, as is true for all health care options available to reserves, only as long as the member continues as a drilling member of the Selected Reserve.

The amendment would require that the Secretary implement the new benefits for members of the Selected Reserve not later than October 1, 2006.

The conferees view expanded benefits for members of the Selected Reserve as an opportunity for members of the Selected Reserve and their families, who commit to continued service in the Selected Reserve, to have access to high quality health care coverage under TRICARE while they are in a non-active duty status. The amendment is not intended to replace employer-provided health insurance, or for the member to be made ineligible for or to be persuaded to opt out of employer-provided health insurance based on membership in the reserves.

Subtitle B—TRICARE Program Improvements

Additional information required by surveys on TRICARE Standard (sec. 711)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 702) that would expand the scope of the survey of the TRICARE Standard health care program that is required by section 723 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2004 (Public Law 108–136).

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 715).

The Senate recedes.

Availability of chiropractic health care services (sec. 712)

The House bill contained a provision (sec.704) that would require the Secretary of Defense to conduct a study of the costs and feasibility of providing chiropractic health care services to the following categories of beneficiaries in the military health care system: active duty and their dependents, reserve component members and their dependents, and retirees and their dependents. The provision would also require the Secretary to develop a plan not later than March 31, 2006, to provide chiropractic health care services and benefits as a permanent part of the Defense Health Program (including TRICARE), and report to the congressional defense committees not later than March 31, 2006, on the study and plan.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the Air Force to complete implementation of chiropractic services for active duty members at 11 sites, which had not opened in accordance with the Department of Defense Report on Chiropractic Health Care Implementation Plan (August 2001). The amendment would authorize the Secretary to identify alternate sites if any of the 11 identified in the Department of Defense report is no longer feasible.

The House recedes.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would clarify that the TRICARE regional offices would be responsible for the monitoring, oversight, and improvement of the Standard option. The amendment would require an annual report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives on those activities, including actions taken by the Department of Defense to address challenges that have been identified by health care providers and beneficiaries with respect to use of the TRICARE Standard option.

Qualifications for individuals serving as TRICARE regional directors (sec. 717)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 718) that would require that, effective on the date of enactment of this Act, any individual serving in the position of TRICARE Regional Director must be either a general or flag officer, or Department of Defense civilian in the Senior Executive Service, and have at least 10 years of health care experience.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

Elsewhere in this Act, the Department of Defense Task Force on Mental Health is required to identify the projects in its report. A pilot project to facilitate Internet-based diagnosis and treatment of Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder and other mental health conditions is required elsewhere in this act.

Department of Defense task force on mental health (sec. 723)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 733) that would require the Secretary of Defense to establish a task force to examine mental health issues in the Armed Forces. The task force would consist of 14 members appointed by the Secretary, and would be required to develop a long-term plan to improve mental health services provided to members of the Armed Forces.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require that persons appointed to the task force have expertise in national mental health policy and military personnel matters, and that such members would include at least one family member of a member of the Armed Forces who has experience working with military families. The amendment would also require the task force to identify pilot projects on early diagnosis and treatment of Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder and other mental health conditions authorized elsewhere in this Act, as well as to evaluate the efficacy of programs to ensure a seamless transition of care for members on active duty from the Department to the Department of Veterans Affairs. The amendment would require a report on the efficiency of pre- and post- deployment mental health screening, including mental health screenings for members of the Armed Forces who have experienced multiple deployments. The amendment would require the Secretary to develop a plan based on the recommendations of the task force, and submit the plan to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives not later than 6 months after receipt of the task force report.

The conferees believe it is critical that the Department adhere to the schedule for full implementation of the AHLTA system in 800 military health clinics and 70 military hospitals throughout the world by December 2006.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 716).

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would add a reporting requirement on measures of timeliness and accessibility of health care.

The conferees are concerned that military medical leaders at all levels must continue to emphasize accountability and vigilance concerning the quality of military health care services, including the prompt and just disposition of adverse events. Emphasis on cost should never rise to a higher level of priority than the quality of services provided.

The conferees are also concerned that the services provided by civilian networks and other contracted civilian providers be of equally high quality, and encourages the Department to examine health care staffing standards such as those promulgated by the Joint Commission on the Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations to ensure continued high quality standards by civilian providers of care.

Correction to eligibility of certain reserve officers for military health care pending active duty following commissioning (sec. 743)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 713) that would ensure that Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC) graduates have access to military health benefits while awaiting active duty orders.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 701).

The Senate recedes.

Prohibition on conversions of military medical and dental positions to civilian medical positions until submission of certification (sec. 744)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 714) that would prohibit the secretary of a military department from converting any military medical position to a civilian medical position until the Secretary of Defense submits a certification to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives that such conversions will not affect health care quality or access. The provision would also require the Comptroller General to conduct a study on the effect of such conversions on the Defense Health Program, and report those findings to Congress not later than March 1, 2006.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 572) that would prohibit the conversion of any medical or dental military position to a civilian position until 90 days after receipt by Congress of a certification by the Secretary of Defense that such conversions did not increase civilian health care costs; that the conversions were in support of joint medical and dental readiness requirements of the uniformed services; and that adequate numbers of civilian providers were available to fill civilian positions based on market surveys.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the certification of both medical and dental military position conversions, and would require that the Secretary of Defense submit a report to Congress along with the required certification on actions taken in response to the recommendations of the Comptroller General study.

Clarification of inclusion of dental care in medical readiness tracking and health surveillance program (sec. 745)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 715) that would clarify that dental readiness is included in the requirement for medical tracking and surveillance activities authorized in the Ronald W. Reagan National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal year 2005 (Public Law 108-375).

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Cooperative outreach to members and former members of the naval service exposed to environmental factors related to sarcoidosis (sec. 746)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 716) that would require the Secretary of the Navy, in coordination with the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, to conduct an outreach program to contact members and former members of the naval service who may have increased risk of sarcoidosis as a result of having been exposed to particles resulting from the removal of nonskid coating used on naval ships.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would clarify that the Secretary of the Navy shall attempt to reach as many members and former members of the naval service as possible who may have had such exposure.

Repeal of requirement for Comptroller General reviews of certain Department of Defense–Department of Veterans Affairs projects on sharing of health care resources (sec. 747)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 714) that would repeal certain reporting requirements for the Comptroller General on defense and veterans affairs health resources sharing projects.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Pandemic avian flu preparedness (sec. 748)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 722) that would require the Secretary of Defense to report to the congressional defense committees on efforts within the Department of Defense to prepare for pandemic influenza, including avian flu.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would expand the report requirements to include acceleration of medical research and development activities.

Follow up assistance for members of the Armed Forces after preseparation physical examinations (sec. 749)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1603) that would require the Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, to assist a member of the Armed Forces in obtaining necessary follow-up health care services, which are required as a result of a preseparation physical examination. The provision would also require the Secretary to provide information on private sector sources of care and assistance to enroll in the health care system of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would clarify that the follow-up services would be obtained from the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Policy on role of military medical and behavioral science personnel in interrogation of detainees (sec. 750)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1071) that would require the Secretary of Defense to establish a policy on the role of military medical and behavioral science personnel in the interrogation of persons detained by the Armed Forces.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees note that the Department of Defense has published Department of Defense Directive 3115.09, "DoD Intelligence Interrogations, Detainee Debriefings and Tactical Questioning" (November 3, 2005), which provides limited guidance on detainee medical issues and refers to standards and procedures set forth by the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs (ASD(HA)). The conferees are concerned that the policy on "Medical Program Principles and Procedures for the Protection and Treatment of Detainees in the Custody of the Armed Forces of the United States," dated June 3, 2005, which was issued by the ASD (HA), does not fully address all medical issues, including the role of medical and behavioral personnel in interrogation, and the use and release of detainee medical information.

The conferees expect that in the development of the policy required by this section, the Secretary of Defense will consult with and consider the views of national and international medical and health care professional organizations that are examining the professional ethics that govern their members' work.

The conferees expect that any policy promulgated by the Secretary of Defense concerning the role of medical or behavioral science personnel in interrogation-related matters will reflect the same applicability to DoD civilians, DoD contractors and non-DoD civilians as required by Department of Defense Directive 3115.09.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Comptroller General report on expanded partnership between the Department of Defense and the Department of Veterans Affairs on the provision on health care services

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 723) that would require the Comptroller General to provide a report to the appropriate committees of Congress that would contain an overview of the current health care systems of the Department of Defense and the Department of Veterans Affairs; a comparative analysis of the characteristics of each system; and an assessment of the advantages and disadvantages of an expanded partnership between the two Departments for the purpose of providing health care services to military retirees and their dependents.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Early identification and treatment of mental health and substance abuse disorders

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 717) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to carry out activities to foster the early identification and treatment of mental health and substance abuse problems experienced by members of the Armed Forces, with emphasis on those who have served in a theater of combat operations in the preceding 12 months. The activities would focus on changing attitudes within the Armed Forces regarding mental health and substance abuse treatment, and would include informational messages directed to military members, their family members, commanders, and supervisory personnel.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Department of Defense Task Force on Mental Health authorized elsewhere in this Act is directed to assess the adequacy of early identification and treatment of mental health and substance abuse problems through the use of internal mass media communication, as well as to assess other tools intended to change attitudes within the Armed Forces regarding mental health and substance abuse treatment.

Limitation on deductible and copayment requirements for nursing home residents under the pharmacy benefits program

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 702) that would limit the out-of-pocket pharmacy expenses for a beneficiary who is a resident of a nursing home and who is required, by state law, to use nursing home pharmacy services that are not part of the pharmacy network under TRICARE.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Mental health screening of members of the Armed Forces for Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder and other mental health conditions

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 574) that would require the Secretary of Defense to perform mental health screenings on each member of the Armed Forces who is deployed in a combat operation or to a combat zone. Such screenings would occur prior to deployment, and at 30 and 120 days after the date of the member's return from the deployment.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

A requirement to assess the efficacy of pre- and post- deployment mental health screening is included in the Department of Defense Task Force on Mental Health authorized elsewhere in this Act.

Services of mental health counselors

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 701) that would allow mental health counselors to be reimbursed for services provided to TRICARE beneficiaries without prior physician referral or supervision. The provision would also permit mental health counselors to enter into personal service contracts with the Department of Defense and require that such counselors meet the licensure or certification requirements for "health care professional" established by section 1094 of title 10, United States Code.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 721) that would authorize mental health counselors who are licensed by a State to provide services without physician referral or supervision in "medically underserved areas" pursuant to section 332 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254e). The amendment would authorize personal services contracts, and also require the Secretary of Defense to establish rules concerning credentialing or certification of participating mental health counselors and payment rates.

The conference report does not include either provision.

The conferees recognize the valuable services that mental health counselors provide for valid mental health disorders under the TRICARE program. The Department of Defense estimates that, on an annual basis, 28,000 TRICARE beneficiaries have an average of seven visits to mental health counselors, in accordance with existing requirements for physician referral and supervision. The conferees encourage the Department to promote even greater utilization of licensed mental health counselors, where appropriate, as part of an integrated health care team, and to examine ways to make as efficient as possible the method of communication among primary care and mental health care providers involved in the treatment of valid mental health disorders in the TRICARE program.

The conferees direct the Department report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives within 120 days of the date of enactment of this Act on actions taken to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of procedures facilitate physician referral and supervision of licensed mental health counselors. The report shall include a description of "best practices" employed throughout the military health system to ensure access to services provided by mental health counselors under the TRICARE program. The conferees encourage the Department to monitor closely the progress within the mental health community toward achievement of a national standard for graduate education accreditation and national professional accreditation, to include uniform professional credentials for licensed mental health counselors. The report should also review the quality of care being provided under the program.

Study and report on civilian and military partnership project

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 724) that would require the Secretary of Defense to conduct a study on the feasibility of conducting a military and civilian partnership project in which Department of Defense and civilian health care providers would provide services to military personnel and civilians at a military medical facility.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

TITLE VIII—ACQUISITION POLICY, ACQUISITION MANAGEMENT, AND RELATED MATTERS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A—Provisions Relating to Major Defense Acquisition Programs

Requirement for certification before major defense acquisition program may proceed to Milestone B (sec. 801)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 801) that would require the Secretary of Defense to certify that a major defense acquisition program meets certain criteria (including technological maturity requirements) before it receives Milestone B approval, or key Decision Point B approval in the case of a space program. The Secretary could waive the certification requirement for national security reasons.

The Senate amendment contained two similar provisions (sections 809 and 858). Section 809 would require the Department of Defense to complete an analysis of alternatives before commencing a major defense acquisition program. Section 858 would extend an existing requirement for annual reports on major defense acquisition programs that fail to meet technological maturity requirements.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would: (1) incorporate the requirement for an analysis of alternatives into the House provision; (2) require certification or waiver by the milestone decision authority, rather than the Secretary; and (3) authorize waiver of the certification requirement only if, absent the waiver, the Department of Defense would be unable to meet critical national security objectives.

Requirements applicable to major defense acquisition programs exceeding baseline costs (sec. 802)

The House bill contained two provisions (secs. 802 and 803) that would modify the oversight requirements for major defense acquisition programs (MDAPs) in sections 2433 and 2435 of title 10, United States Code. Section 802 would require that the Secretary of Defense conduct an analysis of alternatives for any MDAP for which the program acquisition unit cost or the procurement unit cost rises by 15 percent over the baseline estimate. Section 803 would restrict the circumstances in which the Secretary may modify a baseline estimate.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would: (1) amend section 2435 to add a new term—"original Baseline Estimate"—and to restrict the circumstances in which an original baseline estimate may be modified; (2) add two new terms—"significant cost growth" and "critical cost growth"—to section 2433; (3) define significant cost growth and critical cost growth by reference to both the current baseline estimate for an MDAP and the original baseline estimate for the program; and (4) require additional analysis and explanation (but not a formal analysis of alternatives) for any MDAP that experiences critical cost growth.

Taken together, these changes would tighten requirements for flagging programs that are experiencing problematic cost growth and ensure more rigorous review and analysis of these programs. The conferees believe that the added discipline imposed by these provisions should encourage the Department of Defense both to establish more realistic and achievable cost and performance estimates at the outset of MDAPs and to more aggressively manage MDAPs to avoid undesirable cost growth on these programs.

Requirements for determination by Secretary of Defense and notification to Congress before procurement of major weapon systems as commercial items (sec. 803)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 804) that would prohibit the purchase of a major weapon system as a commercial item unless such purchase is specifically authorized by Congress.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary of Defense, prior to any major weapon system being purchased under procedures established for the procurement of commercial items, to: (1) determine that a weapon system meets the definition of a commercial item; (2) determine that it is necessary to meet national security objectives to purchase such weapon system as a commercial item; and (3) notify congressional defense committees at least 30 days prior to the purchase or the treatment of the major weapon system as a commercial item.

Reports on significant increases in program acquisition unit costs or procurement unit costs of major defense acquisition programs (sec. 804)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 807) that would require the Secretary of Defense to report to the congressional defense committees on the acquisition status of major defense acquisition programs whose costs have exceeded by more than 50 percent the original baseline projection of such costs.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would extend the time for the report.

Report on use of lead system integrators in the acquisition of major systems (sec. 805)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 809A) that would require the Secretary of Defense to report to the congressional defense committees on actions taken or to be taken by the Department of Defense regarding the use of lead system integrators for the acquisition of major systems.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would extend the time for the report, and would also make technical changes.

Congressional notification of cancellation of major automated information systems (sec. 806)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 809D) that would require the Secretary of Defense to report to the congressional defense committees no less than 60 days before any proposed change to the acquisition strategy of any major automated information system, as defined by Department of Defense regulations.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Subtitle B—Acquisition Policy and Management

Internal controls for procurements on behalf of the Department of Defense (sec. 811)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 801) that would require the Department of Defense Inspector General, in consultation with the Inspectors General of non-defense agencies, to determine whether the policies, procedures, and internal controls of non-defense agencies for purchases on behalf of the Department of Defense are adequate to ensure compliance with defense procurement requirements of law and regulation.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would clarify the language of the provision and limit the joint reviews to the Department of Interior, the Department of Treasury, and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Management structure for the procurement of contract services (sec. 812)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 802) that would require the secretary of each military department to establish a Contract Support Acquisition Center to act as the executive agent for the acquisition of contract services for that military department. The Secretary of Defense would be required to establish an additional acquisition center within the Defense Logistics Agency to act as the executive agent for the acquisition of contract services by the defense agencies.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would rewrite section 2330 of title 10, United States Code, to strengthen the requirement for the Secretary to implement a management structure for the procurement of contract services for the Department of Defense.

Section 2330, as amended, would establish a senior official responsible for the management of the acquisition of contract services for each of the military departments and for the defense agencies and components outside the military departments. Under the amended section 2330, the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology, and Logistics would be responsible for developing and maintaining policies, procedures, and best practices guidelines for the acquisition of contract services, while the senior officials responsible for the acquisition of contract services would be responsible for the implementation of those policies, procedures, and guidelines by the military departments and defense agencies. Each senior official would be required to assign responsibility for the review and approval of procurements to specific individuals in the Department, subject to the direction, supervision, and oversight of the senior official. This provision would give the Department flexibility as to the number, qualifications, and location of officers and employees authorized to make day-to-day decisions regarding the acquisition of contract services while ensuring that, in making such decisions, these officers and employees are subject to the direction, supervision, and control of an acquisition chain of command.

The conference amendment would provide for phased implementation of the amended section 2330 to ensure that the Department has the time needed to fully implement the new requirements.

Report on service surcharges for purchases made for military departments through other Department of Defense agencies (sec. 813)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 805) that would require the Department of Defense to review and report on service charges imposed on one component of the Department for purchases made through another component of the Department.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment that would further define the spend analysis as required under the Senate provision.

Authorization of evaluation factor for defense contractors employing or subcontracting with members of the selected reserve of the reserve components of the Armed Forces (sec. 819)

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would provide discretionary authority to the Secretary of Defense to use an evaluation factor related to the employment of members of the Selected Reserve.

Subtitle C—Amendments to General Contracting Authorities, Procedures, and Limitations

Participation by Department of Defense in acquisition workforce training fund (sec. 821)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 822) that would enable the Department of Defense to contribute to, and benefit from, the acquisition workforce training fund.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would allow the use of section 845 for a prototype project in excess of $20.0 million but less than $100.0 million only if the senior procurement executive for the agency determines that the use of the authority is essential to promoting the success of the prototype project, and in excess of $100.0 million only if the Under Secretary of Defense determines that the use of the authority is essential to meet critical national security objectives and notifies the congressional defense committees of the determination at least 30 days before the authority is exercised.

Increased limit applicable to assistance provided under certain Procurement Technical Assistance Programs (sec. 824)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 847) that would increase from $150,000 to $300,000 the maximum grant for a statewide program under the Procurement Technical Assistance Program authorized by section 2414 of title 10, United States Code.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees note that section 2533a (b)(1)(B) of title 10, United States Code, as modified by this section, does not cover small arm protective inserts ("SAPI plates") for body armor because these inserts are "added to, and not normally associated with, clothing".

The provision would give the civilian board jurisdiction over contract appeals from non-defense agencies and ensure that the board could, with the concurrence of the heads of affected agencies, assume responsibility for any other functions previously performed by the boards of contract appeals for civilian agencies.

The conference agreement would make no change to the Armed Services Board of Contract Appeals (ASBCA), because the ASBCA already has consolidated jurisdiction for contract appeals from the Department of Defense, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Statement of policy and report relating to contracting with employers of persons with disabilities (sec. 848)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 843) that would amend section 806 of the Bob Stump National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2003 (Public Law 107–314) to give the Department of Defense greater flexibility to address combat emergencies.

The House bill contained no similar provision. .

The Senate recedes.

The conferees note that the Senate provision adding a new category of statutes and regulations that are waivable to prevent combat fatalities was not necessary, because the Department may already waive any provision of law, policy, directive, or regulation addressing the solicitation and selection of sources pursuant to the authority in section 811 of the Ronald W. Reagan National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2005 (Public Law 108–375) for the procurement of equipment urgently needed to eliminate a combat deficiency that has resulted in combat fatalities.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 812) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to annually determine whether a foreign country with a reciprocal defense procurement Memorandum of Understanding or agreement with the United States has qualitatively or quantitatively increased defense exports to China. If it is determined that no qualitative or quantitative increase has occurred in the previous year, the Secretary may on an annual basis waive the application of statutory domestic source requirements and domestic content requirements, provided that: (1) the application of the requirements would impede the reciprocal procurement of defense items under a Memorandum of Understanding between the United States and another country; and (2) the other country does not discriminate against items produced in the United States to a greater degree than the United States discriminates against items produced in that country

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Contractors on the battlefield

The House bill contained a title (title XVI) that would establish certain requirements for contractors on the battlefield, including contractors accompanying the force and contractors not accompanying the force.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees note that subsequent to action on the House bill, the Secretary of Defense issued regulations addressing the issue of contractors on the battlefield. However, the regulations issued by the Secretary apply only to contractors accompanying the force.

The conferees believe that it is important for the Department of Defense to address issues raised by the presence on the battlefield of contractors not accompanying the force. This term includes contractors and subcontractors at any tier under a contract with any federal government agency, if the work to be performed is related to private security, reconstruction, humanitarian assistance, peacekeeping, or other activities in an area of responsibility of a commander of a combatant command in which there are ongoing combat operations or there is a significant risk that contractor employees could come under hostile fire.

Accordingly, the conferees direct the Secretary to revise all relevant policy, guidance, and instructions issued pursuant to section 1205 of the Ronald W. Reagan National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2005 (Public Law 108–375) to address security issues raised by contractors not accompanying the force. The revised guidance should, at a minimum, address the following issues: (1) measures to ensure that security issues raised by contractors not accompanying the force are addressed in integrated planning by the combatant commanders; (2) measures to ensure visibility and accountability of employees of contractors not accompanying the force (including accounting for U.S. nationals, local nationals, and third-party nationals); (3) measures to ensure the communication of relevant threat information to contractors not accompanying the force; (4) measures addressing force protection and weapons issuance issues for contractors not accompanying the force (including accounting for the number and qualifications of all personnel carrying weapons); and (5) measures to ensure that the data gathered in the implementation of this guidance is kept and maintained in a central location for a reasonable period of time.

GAO subsequently issued a June 1, 2004, report entitled "Rebuilding Iraq: Fiscal Year 2003 Contract Award Procedures and Management Challenges". The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives regarding the utility of share-in-savings contracts and any steps that may be necessary and appropriate to make share-in-savings contracting a viable, effective, and desirable contacting method for use by the Department. The provision would also require the Secretary to report to the congressional defense committees on the status of efforts to establish requirements for radio frequency identifier technology for Department of Defense contracting.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees direct the Secretary to: (1) develop and implement a strategy to educate the small business community on radio frequency identifier technology requirements; and (2) report to the congressional defense committees not later than October 1, 2006, on the strategy and the extent to which it has been implemented.

The conferees expect the General Accountability Office to address the need, if any, for a reporting requirement of this type in the context of the review of the Department's efforts to identify contract fraud, waste, and abuse, as required by section 841.

Review of certain contractor ethics matters

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 822) that would require the Secretary of Defense to review certain contractor ethics matters.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees note that the advisory panel on acquisition laws, regulations, and practices established pursuant to the Services Acquisition Reform Act of 2003 (title XIV of Public Law 108–136) (the "SARA panel") is currently considering these issues. The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees agree that section 806 of the Ronald W. Reagan National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2005 (Public Law 108-375) already makes the competition requirement in section 113 of title 32, United States Code, subject to the exceptions in section 2304(c) of title 10, United States Code. Section 806 ensures that procedures other than competitive procedures are available for the selection of National Guard activities in the same circumstances and to the same extent as such procedures are available for the selection of any other entity.

The Senate recedes.

The changes recommended by the Senate provision will be included in the section of the bill on technical and clerical amendments.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 812) that would require the use of commercially available online procurement services, including reverse auction services, to purchase commercial items to the maximum extent practicable.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees note that online procurement services, such as reverse auction services, are appropriate for the acquisition of some types of commercial items, but may not be suitable for others. For example, items that call for technical solutions, require modification, or will be acquired on a basis other than low-cost are unlikely to be suited to acquisition through reverse auction methods. There may be cases in which the use of commercially available online procurement services could limit access to federal agency contracts.

The conferees direct the Administrator for Federal Procurement Policy, in consultation with the Federal Acquisition Regulatory Council established pursuant to section 25 of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 421), to review the use of online procurement services, such as reverse auction services, and identify: (1) types of commercial item procurements that are suitable for the use of such services; and (2) features that should be provided by online procurement services that are used by federal agencies.

TITLE IX—DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE ORGANIZATION AND MANAGEMENT

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

The current state of military space

Despite the opportunities identified for the future of military space highlighted by the 2001 Space Commission, the conferees believe the Department of Defense response has been disappointing. The conferees see fundamental shortfalls and a lack of sufficient improvement in three areas that diminish U.S. preeminence in space and threaten national security. These areas include the development of a fully qualified and competent space cadre; improvements in the acquisition system that will restore confidence in the development of our space systems; and the creation of Operationally Responsive Space (ORS) systems.

The development of a qualified and competent space cadre has received growing attention, particularly in the Air Force. Initiatives such as National Security Space Institute and Space Education Consortium at Air Force Space Command as well as the Joint Space Studies Center at Air University are commendable efforts. The conferees are concerned, however, about the breadth and depth of the current plan for development of a space cadre, specifically in the area of education and training, in addressing the role of academia and industry in a space cadre. The conferees believe the accumulation of skills and competencies of government, academia, and industry represent a comprehensive view of the military space community for the United States. As such, the conferees recommend that the Department be more aggressive in developing programs and partnerships across the U.S. government, industry, and academia.

While the Department has taken positive steps to improve the current space acquisition system, it is not yet apparent what impact these initiatives might have on the performance of space acquisition. As a result, the conferees will maintain this issue at the forefront of congressional interests. Moreover, the conferees recommend that the Department engage those issues not yet fully addressed. Those include the requisite workforce size and skills, subcontractor management, and technical maturity of acquisition projects. Additionally, the conferees recommend that the Department develop an alternative and complementary business model for space acquisition and system deployment that will increase the production rate of space systems and lower costs.

The conferees believe ORS, the ability to assemble and launch a desired space-based capability on demand in a cost effective manner, has the potential to truly transform military space. The conferees believe that ORS will provide many new benefits to the military space community. The conferees also believe that ORS will stimulate the production of simpler, shorter living satellites, thus dramatically reducing current costs and shortening schedules. Additionally, low cost launch and "plug and play" satellite development will create the ability to refresh systems with new technology and fly constellations optimized for theater commanders. The conferees are disappointed in the progress achieved and are concerned about a lack of vision and initiative by the Department in this area. The conferees believe ORS will transform the battlefield and the way the warfighter thinks of space and, as such, strongly encourage the Air Force to embrace this concept and the Department to consider this in the development of the Quadrennial Defense Review.

The amendment would require the development of health care access standards by the Chief Operating Officer and would also require an assessment by the Comptroller General on monitoring and oversight of health care services for residents of the retirement home.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

The conferees note that this provision provides unusual flexibility to the Department of Defense. It was included in response to a late request from the Department in order to permit important chemical demilitarization activities to proceed without further delay. The provision permits a one-time authorization to use fiscal year 2006 research, development, test, and evaluation funds for military construction at the ACWA sites. The conferees expect the Department to request funding for these projects in the proper military construction accounts in the fiscal year 2007 and future years budget submissions. The conferees also expect the Department to submit the required 1391 forms for these military construction projects.

The conferees strongly urge the Department and the administration to take all steps necessary to ensure that the chemical demilitarization programs receive the management attention, priority, and resources required to ensure that the United States meets its obligations under the Chemical Weapons Convention to destroy its chemical weapons stockpile by April 2012, and that it does so safely and efficiently.

On July 14, 2005, the Acting Secretary of the Air Force issued a new order on the subject of the functions and duties of the General Counsel and the Judge Advocate General. This order by its terms supersedes the May 15, 2003, order, and does not contain the objectionable language contained in the earlier order. It appears that no final instruction or memorandum was ever issued by the General Counsel of the Department in reliance on the May 15, 2003, order.

The conferees will continue to monitor the situation in the Department to ensure that the Secretary of the Air Force, the Chief of Staff of the Air Force, and commanders continue to have access to independent legal advice from the Judge Advocate General and judge advocates in the field, as required by section 574 of the Ronald W. On November 22, 2005, the Army announced that it had entered a contract under which insurance rates would range from $5.00 to $8.50 per $100.00 of salary cost. This represents considerable savings over the DBA insurance rates between $10.00 and $21.00 per $100.00 of salary cost previously paid by the Department of Defense, as reported by the Government Accountability Office. The conferees believe that the pilot program is an important first step. The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees note that:

(1) Consistent with warhead levels agreed to in the Moscow Treaty, the United States is modifying the capacity of the Minuteman III intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM) from its prior capability to carry up to 3 independent reentry vehicles (RVs) to carry as few as a single RV, a process known as downloading.

(2) The 2001 Nuclear Posture Review (NPR) confirmed the need for 500 ICBMs.

(3) In a potential nuclear crisis, it is important that the nuclear weapons systems of the United States be configured so as to discourage other nations from making a first strike.

(4) The ICBM force is currently being considered as part of the deliberations of the Department of Defense for the Quadrennial Defense Review.

The conferees note that the policy of the United States, as set out in the 2001 NPR, is to deploy a force of 500 ICBMs. The conferees further note that unanticipated strategic developments may compel the United States to make changes to this force structure in the future.

Reduction in overall authorization due to inflation savings

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1004) that would reduce the amount authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Defense by $1.3 billion to reflect the reduced inflation estimates in the Congressional Budget Office's annual review of the budget.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Repeal of requirement for report to Congress regarding global strike capability

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1045) that would repeal the requirement in section 1032 of the National Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 2004 (Public Law 108-136) for the Secretary of Defense to submit a report on Global Strike for fiscal year 2006.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees, after reviewing the June 2005 Prompt Global Strike Plan submitted by the Secretary, concur with the need to explore a wide range of capabilities for responding rapidly to emerging threats to the United States and its strategic interests. The report noted a capability gap of particular concern: "for the near future, in the event of rapidly developing crisis, the Department of Defense will not have non-nuclear, long-range precision strike options for consideration by the national leadership." The conferees believe it is important to close this gap as soon as technically possible.

The conferees understand from the 2005 report that the evaluation of a wide range of current and future global strike capabilities is ongoing, and will be in the capabilities mix examined in the 2005 Quadrennial Defense Review. However, in the section of the 2005 report defining global strike assets, the Department appears to limit global strike to capability delivered by aircraft or naval platforms, neglecting land-based options. As such, the conferees are concerned that ample consideration is not being given to the full spectrum of options to provide a robust and cost-effective capability to strike time-urgent targets around the globe. The conferees, therefore, want to emphasize the importance of a complete evaluation, considering all air, sea, and land-based capabilities, not limited to intercontinental ballistic missiles, and including mobile, land-based boost glide capabilities. The conferees also direct the Department to include in their 2006 annual report on Prompt Global Strike a full discussion of how the Department plans to close the non-nuclear, long-range precision strike gap.

Report on alleged clandestine detention facilities for individuals captured in the global war on terrorism

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1047) that would require the Director of National Intelligence to provide the members of the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives a detailed report on the cost and operations on any clandestine prison or detention facility currently or formerly operated by the U.S. Government, regardless of location, where detainees in the global war on terrorism are or were held.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees determined that the amendment was outside the jurisdiction of the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

Retention on reimbursement for provision of reciprocal fire protection services

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1083) that would amend section 1856d of title 42, United States Code, by adding a provision that would require that any funds received by the Department of Defense for fire protection provided pursuant to this statute would be credited to the appropriation fund or account from which the expenses for that fire protection were paid.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Sense of the Senate on Common Remotely Operated Weapons Station platform

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1091) that would require funding for the Common Remotely Operated Weapons Station (CROWS) platform in the request by the President for emergency supplemental appropriations for the Department of Defense for fiscal year 2006.

The House bill contained no similar provision

The Senate recedes.

The conferees have strongly supported and will continue to support the development and employment of remote weapon stations on combat vehicles such as the Stryker and on tactical wheeled vehicles such as the M1114 Up-Armored High Mobility Multipurpose Wheeled Vehicle and the Armored Security Vehicle. The conferees understand the benefits provided by remote weapon station platforms such as providing day and night target detection, recognition, and engagement at long distances, while allowing the soldier or marine to remain protected by the confines of an armored vehicle. In particular, the conferees agree with the findings in section 1091 regarding the benefits of remote weapon station platforms to include the CROWS platform.

The conferees agree to authorize an additional $4.0 million in PE 64601A for the continued development of a reduced weight and size configuration of the CROWS platform and an additional $2.0 million in PE 63640M for additional CROWS platforms systems for the U.S. Marine Corps.

Support for counterdrug activities through bases of operation and training facilities in Afghanistan

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The provision would require that the maximum total compensation allowed would not exceed $200,000, and the authority to waive the limitation on total annual compensation would be limited to fiscal year 2006.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1106) that would authorize the head of a federal agency to provide travel and transportation allowances for three family members of a federal civilian employee, who was held captive and is being repatriated to a site inside or outside the United States. The provision would also authorize waiver of the limitation on the number of family members of an employee who could receive such assistance, under circumstances determined to be appropriate by the head of the agency.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 631(b)(1)) that would authorize travel and per diem allowances for up to three family members of federal civilian employees who are repatriated after being held captive.

The House recedes to section 631(b)(1) of the Senate amendment with a technical amendment.

Strategic human capital plan for civilian employees of the Department of Defense (sec. 1122)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1106) that would require the Secretary of Defense to develop a strategic plan for the civilian workforce of the Department of Defense. The plan would include a workforce gap analysis and a plan of action for developing and shaping the Department of Defense civilian workforce to address gaps in critical skills and competencies.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would extend the time period for development of the strategic human capital plan from 6 months to 1 year from the date of enactment of this Act, and to require annual updates to the plan and annual reports to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives from 2007 through 2010. The amendment would remove the requirement in section 1106 that recruitment and retention goals for the civilian workforce not be subject to any limit or constraint on the size of the civilian workforce in the Department.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1108) that would require the Comptroller General to conduct a study of defense laboratory personnel demonstration authorities and successful management practices utilized by laboratories and facilities with similar technical workforce recruitment and retention challenges.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would repeal the requirement that the Comptroller General conduct the study and, also amend the content of the study.

The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to commission the National Defense University to conduct an independent study of successful management practices of highly technical workforces.

Support by Department of Defense of pilot project for Civilian Linguist Reserve Corps (sec. 1124)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1046) that would establish a 3-year pilot project for a Civilian Linguist Reserve Corps within the Department of Defense, comprised of citizens fluent in foreign languages who would be available to provide translation services and related duties. The provision would also require the Secretary of Defense to submit a final report to Congress not later than 6 months after the completion of the pilot project on the lessons learned, best practices, and recommendations for full implementation of the Civilian Linguist Reserve Corps.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees understand that the Director of National Intelligence has entered into a contract with the Department of Defense for services to carry out the pilot project, as authorized under section 613 of the Intelligence Authorization Act of 2005 (Public Law 108–487).

The House recedes with an amendment that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to support the implementation of the Civilian Linguist Reserve Corps pilot project of the Director of National Intelligence, subject to the availability of appropriated funds, pursuant to section 613.

The House recedes with an amendment that would limit the authorized increase to 50. The conferees believe any further increases must be accompanied by greater justification that addresses increases in intelligence flag and general officer positions, growth in Defense Intelligence Senior Leader positions, and the affect these increases would have on the GS–15 and military 06 inventories in the affected defense agencies.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Authority for heads of agencies to allow shorter length of required service by federal employees after completion of training

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1104) that would provide the heads of executive agencies the authority to determine the appropriate length of service an employee must perform in return for training paid for by the U.S. government. The Senate amendment contained no similar provision. The House recedes.

TITLE XII—MATTERS RELATING TO FOREIGN NATIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A—Assistance and Training

Extension of humanitarian and civic assistance provided to host nations in conjunction with military operations (sec. 1201)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1201) that wouldincrease funding in support of activities to detect and clear landmines. It would also expand medical, dental, and veterinary care to include related education, training, and technical assistance. The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 1202). The Senate recedes.

Commanders' Emergency Response Program (sec. 1202)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1202) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to use up to $500.0 million in fiscal year 2006 operations and maintenance funding for increased costs due to Operation Iraqi Freedom and Operation Enduring Freedom for the Commanders' Emergency Response Program (CERP). The CERP program provides commanders in Iraq and Afghanistan funds for use in small humanitarian and reconstruction projects in their areas of responsibility. The provision would require quarterly reports on the source and use of funds pursuant to this program. The provision would prohibit the use of CERP funds for training and equipping the Iraq and Afghanistan national armies, police, and security forces, and it would require the Secretary to issue guidance to the Commander, U.S. Central Command, on the use of CERP funds.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 1201), but provided 2-year authority for the CERP program. The provision did not include a prohibition on use of CERP funds for specified purposes, nor did it require the Secretary to issue CERP guidance.

The House recedes with an amendment that would provide the Secretary authority to waive any provision of law that would prohibit, restrict, limit, or otherwise constrain implementation of the CERP program in Iraq and Afghanistan. The amendment would also require the Secretary to submit to the congressional defense committees within 30 days of enactment the current guidance for CERP, and to submit to those committees any changes to the CERP guidance within 15 days of the issuance of such modified guidance.

It is the understanding of the conferees that the CERP program is currently being implemented pursuant to the guidance issued by the Comptroller on July 27, 2005. That guidance explicitly prohibits, among other things, the use of CERP funds for providing goods, services, or funds to national armies, National Guard forces, border security forces, civil defense forces, infrastructure protection forces, highway patrol units, police, special police, or intelligence or other security forces. The conferees expect this element of the current CERP guidance to remain in any subsequently issued CERP guidance. The Congress has appropriated significant funds for the specific purpose of training and equipping the Iraq and Afghanistan national armies, police, and security forces, and therefore CERP funds are specifically not intended to be used for that purpose.

It has come to the attention of the conferees that, as a result of the bidding process for larger CERP projects, some CERP projects have been carried out using foreign labor. Because one of the purposes of CERP is to employ Iraq and Afghanistan residents in local humanitarian and reconstruction projects, the conferees urge that, whenever possible, CERP projects be carried out using local citizens or residents of the country in which the projects are being carried out. The conferees recommend that the CERP guidance be modified to reflect this preference.

Modification of geographic restriction under bilateral and regional cooperation programs for payment of certain expenses of defense personnel of developing countries (sec. 1203)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1204) that would provide the Secretary of Defense flexibility to pay expenses for personnel from developing countries to attend a conference, seminar, or similar meeting, even if the conference, seminar, or similar meeting takes place in a location that is outside of the combatant commander's area of responsibility in which the developing country is located.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 1203).

The Senate recedes with a technical amendment.

Authority for Department of Defense to enter into acquisition and cross-servicing agreements with regional organizations of which the United States is not a member (sec. 1204)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1205) that would authorize the Department of Defense to enter into acquisition and cross-servicing agreements with regional organizations of which the United States is not a member.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 803).

The Senate recedes.

Two-year extension of authority for payment of certain administrative services and support for coalition liaison officers (sec. 1205)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1206) that would extend the authority to fund certain administrative services for coalition liaison officers until September 30, 2007.

The Senate bill contained a similar provision (sec. 1204).

The Senate recedes.

Authority to build the capacity of foreign military forces (sec. 1206)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1206) that would provide the Secretary of Defense authority to transfer up to $750.0 million in a fiscal year in funds available to the Department of Defense to the Department of State for the purpose of building the capacity of partner nations' military or security forces to disrupt or destroy terrorist networks, close safe havens, or participate in or support U.S., coalition, or international military or stability operations. The House bill contained no similar provision. The House recedes with an amendment that would provide the President with authority to direct the Secretary of Defense to conduct or support a program to build the capacity of a foreign nation's military forces in order for that nation to conduct counterterrorist operations and to participate in or support military and stability operations in which the United States is a participant. The program could include the provision of equipment, supplies, and training, and shall promote observance of and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and respect for legitimate civilian authority. This authority could not be used to provide assistance that is otherwise prohibited by any provision of law, nor could it be used to provide assistance to any foreign nation that would otherwise be prohibited from receiving such assistance. The provision further requires the Secretary of Defense to jointly formulate with the Secretary of State any program conducted under this authority, and to coordinate with the Secretary of State in its implementation. The provision requires the Secretary of Defense to provide a notification to specified congressional committees before initiating any activities under this authority. This authority would expire on September 30, 2007.

The provision would also require a report from the President on the strengths and weaknesses of current laws governing and relating to the provision of this type of assistance; recommended changes, if any, to those laws; any organizational and procedural changes that should be made in the Department of Defense and the Department of State to improve their ability to conduct such programs; and the resources and funding mechanisms required to assure adequate funding for such programs.

The conferees note that under current law, foreign military training programs are conducted exclusively under the authority of the Secretary of State. The conferees believe it is important that any changes in statutory authorities for foreign military assistance do not have unintended consequences for the effective coordination of U.S. foreign policy writ large, nor should they detract from the Department of Defense's focus on its core responsibilities, particularly the warfighting tasks for which it is uniquely suited. The conferees view the provision under this section of limited new authorities for the President to direct the Secretary of Defense to conduct such programs as a 2-year pilot program. The conferees intend to review carefully how that authority is exercised so as to have a basis for determining whether and, if so, in what precise manner, to reauthorize this or provide other authority after the conclusion of the pilot program. An important factor in the conferees' future consideration of this matter will be the report that is to be provided under this section.

Security and stabilization assistance (sec. 1207)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1207) that would provide the Secretary of Defense authority to use or transfer defense articles, services, training or other support, including support acquired by contract or otherwise, to provide immediate reconstruction, security or stabilization assistance to a foreign country for the purpose of restoring or maintaining peace and security in that country. The provision would permit the Secretary of Defense to transfer funds to the Department of State or any other federal agency for this purpose. The aggregate value of assistance provided or funds transferred under this authority could not exceed $200.0 million in a fiscal year. The House bill contained no similar provision. The House recedes with an amendment that would clarify that the Secretary of Defense may provide to the Secretary of State services, defense articles, and funding up to the amount of $100.0 million in a fiscal year to facilitate the provision by the Secretary of State of reconstruction, security, or stabilization assistance to a foreign country. The amendment would limit this authority to fiscal years 2006 and 2007. The amendment would require the Secretary of Defense, in coordination with the Secretary of State, to notify specified congressional committees of the use of this authority. Any services, defense articles, and funding transferred to the Secretary of State under this authority shall be subject to the Foreign Assistance Act, the Arms Export Control Act, and other laws under which the Secretary of State is authorized to provide such assistance.

The conferees commend the administration for the steps it is taking to improve U.S. capacity and interagency coordination in planning for, supporting, and conducting stability operations in post-conflict situations. The conferees support the steps the Secretary of Defense is taking to place greater emphasis on the stability operations mission in Department of Defense planning and guidance so that the mission is fully integrated across all Department activities.

In authorizing this provision, the conferees also express their support for the Department of State Office of the Coordinator for Reconstruction and Stabilization (S/CRS). The mission of S/CRS is to lead, coordinate and institutionalize U.S. government civilian capacity to prevent or prepare for post-conflict situations, and to help stabilize and reconstruct societies in transition from conflict or civil strife. The conferees commend the Department of Defense's active support of and cooperation with S/CRS, and urge the Department of Defense to continue to deepen its coordination with the Department of State on planning for and participating in post-conflict stability operations and reconstruction efforts.

The conferees view this provision as a temporary authority to provide additional resources, if needed, to the Department of State until S/CRS is fully stood up and adequately resourced. The conferees do not believe it is appropriate, and are not inclined, to provide long-term funding from the Department of Defense to the Department of State so that the Department of State can fulfill its statutory authorities. The conferees urge the administration to request the necessary resources for S/CRS in fiscal year 2007 and future years budget submissions for the Department of State.

Reimbursement of certain coalition nations for support provided to United States military operations (sec. 1208)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1531) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to reimburse any key cooperating nation for logistical and military support provided by that nation to, or in connection with U.S. military operations in Iraq, Afghanistan, and the global war on terrorism. The total amount of payments made under the authority of this section during fiscal year 2006 may not exceed $1.5 billion. The Secretary may not enter into any contractual obligation to make payment under the authority of this provision without congressional notification. The Secretary shall notify congressional defense committees not less than 15 days before making any payment under the authority of this section.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Authority to transfer defense articles and provide defense services to the military and security forces of Iraq and Afghanistan (sec. 1209)

The conferees included a provision that would provide the President authority during fiscal year 2006 to transfer defense articles from the stocks of the Department of Defense, and to provide defense services in connection with the transfer of such defense articles, to the military and security forces of Iraq and Afghanistan in order to support their efforts to restore and maintain peace and security in those countries. The provision would limit to $500,000,000 the aggregate value of defense articles to be transferred and defense services to be provided. This authority would be subject to certain authorities and limitations, as specified in this provision, that are applicable to the transfer of excess defense articles under the Foreign Assistance Act (22 U.S.C. 2321j). The provision would require the President to submit to specified congressional committees a notification 15 days prior to the exercise of this authority. The notification would include: (1) information that is required by specified provisions of the Foreign Assistance Act; (2) the amount and type of defense articles to be transferred and services to be provided, and the brigade-level units from which the defense articles are to be transferred or defense services provided; and (3) the element of the military or security force that is the proposed recipient of each defense article to be transferred or defense service to be provided.

The conferees note that this provision would require the President to make an assessment that the proposed transfer of defense articles or provision of defense services will not have an adverse impact on the military readiness of the United States. The conferees understand this to mean that the overall readiness of the U.S. Armed Forces would not be adversely impacted. The conferees understand that the readiness of a particular unit could be temporarily impacted following the transfer of defense articles under this provision, and would not expect that fact to prevent the President from exercising this authority.

The conferees further note that the authority provided by this provision would not permit the transfer of defense articles or the provision of defense services to nongovernmental or irregular forces such as private militias.

Subtitle B—Nonproliferation Matters and Countries of Concern

Prohibitions on procurements from Communist Chinese military companies (sec. 1211)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1213) that would prohibit the Secretary of Defense from purchasing goods or services from any foreign person connected to the Chinese military or security forces.

In addition, the Secretary shall submit to the Comptroller General, no later than 45 days after the end of each reporting month, the Department of Defense Supplemental and Cost of War Execution reports. Based on these reports, the Comptroller General shall provide Congress quarterly updates on war costs.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the report to differentiate costs by operation.

Quarterly reports on war strategy in Iraq (sec. 1222)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1049a) that would require that at the same time the Secretary of Defense submits to Congress required reports on stability and security in Iraq, the Secretary and appropriate personnel from the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) shall provide the appropriate committees of Congress a briefing on the strategy for the war in Iraq.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would include the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence and the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence in the briefings and that these briefings terminate after 12 of the quarterly briefings have been provided, or December 31, 2008, whichever is later. The conferees acknowledge that the portion of the briefing presented by the CIA will focus on the latest intelligence assessments regarding the war in Iraq.

Report on records of civilian casualties in Afghanistan and Iraq (sec. 1223)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1048) that would require the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to appropriate committees of Congress with information on records of civilian casualties in Afghanistan and Iraq. The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1224) that would express the sense of Congress that cooperation between the United States and Russia with regard to missile defense is in the interest of the United States and that the United States should explore innovative and nontraditional means of cooperation with Russia in the area of missile defense.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would include implementation of the Moscow Joint Data Exchange Center as an additional possibility for cooperation with Russia with respect to missile defense.

United States policy on Iraq (sec. 1227)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1211) that would express a sense of the Senate about the policy on Iraq that included, among other provisions, a recognition that the members of the U.S. armed forces who are serving or have served in Iraq and their families deserve the utmost respect and the heartfelt gratitude of the American people; that the Iraqi people have made enormous sacrifices; that calendar year 2006 should be a period of significant transition to Iraqi sovereignty, with the security forces taking the lead, thereby creating the conditions for the phased redeployment of U.S. forces from Iraq; and that the administration should tell the leaders of all groups and political parties in Iraq that they need to make the compromises necessary to achieve a broad-based and sustainable political settlement.

The provision would also direct that not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, and every 3 months thereafter, the President shall submit to Congress a report on U.S. policy and military operations in Iraq. This report is in addition to the various reports, briefings, and updates the President and his other senior officials have provided on a routine basis. The provision contained a list of conditions that shall be addressed in the report.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would permit the President to submit a classified annex, recognizes the progress of the Iraqi Security Forces, and that the professional military judgment of our senior military should be a key factor in future decisions.

The conferees acknowledge that the President has delivered over 24 major speeches on Iraq and provided Congress and the American people with a National Strategy for Victory in Iraq on November 30, 2005.

Subtitle D—Other Matters

Purchase of weapons overseas for force protection purposes in countries in which combat operations are ongoing (sec. 1231)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1221) that would permit the Secretary of Defense to purchase weapons from any foreign person, foreign government, international organization, or other entity located in a country in which U.S. combat personnel are engaged in military operations for the purpose of protecting those personnel. The provision would limit the amount expended during any fiscal year for this purpose to $15.0 million. The provision would also require an annual report on the use of this authority.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 324) that would permit weapons purchased under this authority to be destroyed, and would require the Secretary of Defense to promptly notify the congressional defense committees of any use of this authority.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require a semiannual report on the use of this authority.

The conferees note that this provision does not provide the Secretary of Defense authority to transfer weapons purchased under this authority to military and security forces of a foreign country. The conferees further note that authority in this section is intended for use by the U.S. Armed Forces during ongoing military operations. On those occasions when the Secretary of Defense uses this authority during military operations in a country in which a wider internationally-led disarmament, demobilization, and reintegration (DDR) program, such as those that took place in Bosnia or Afghanistan, is taking place, the conferees believe that the Secretary of Defense should closely consult and coordinate with the Secretary of State to ensure that actions taken pursuant to the authority of this section complements, or is integrated with, such an internationally-led program or utilizes best practices for such DDR programs.

Riot control agents (sec. 1232)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1080) that would restate current U.S. policy on riot control agents, and require a report on the use of riot control agents by members of the Armed Forces.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

The conferees note that the report required by this provision should include a description of the doctrinal publications and any other resources made available to members of the Armed Forces regarding the tactical employment of riot control agents. The report should also include a discussion of whether riot control agent inventories are sufficient in numbers and type to meet existing requirements.

Requirement for establishment of certain criteria applicable to Global Posture Review (sec. 1233)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1222) that would require the Secretary of Defense to develop criteria, as part of the Global Posture Review, for assessing the costs and benefits of deploying to particular overseas locations and for establishing new overseas facilities.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would clarify the reporting requirements. The amendment would also add a requirement for the Secretary to notify the congressional defense committees within 30 days after the United States enters into an agreement with a foreign country to support the deployment of elements of the U.S. Armed Forces in that country.

The conferees are concerned that the implementation of the Integrated Global Basing and Presence Strategy (IGPBS) may result in higher costs for the Department of Defense, new requirements for strategic mobility assets, and an increased deployment tempo for military units and personnel. The conferees intend for the Secretary to develop criteria and a mechanism for the analysis of alternatives to assess the impact of basing decisions on various aspects of military operations and to submit a report to Congress detailing these considerations by March 30, 2006. The conferees also expect the Secretary to include in the annual budget submission of the Department a clear account of all proposed expenditures associated with the implementation of the IGPBS.

The conferees note that certain factors to be assessed in the report required by this provision apply to agreements with host nations, while other factors depend on the specific nature of the overseas facility. The conferees expect the Secretary to develop criteria and to provide the most comprehensive assessment possible for each overseas facility subject to a new basing arrangement.

The United States-China Economic Security Review Commission (sec. 1234)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1210) that would note certain findings of the 2004 Report to Congress of the United States-China Economic and Security Review Commission. The provision would also express the sense of Congress that the President should take immediate steps to establish a plan to address the emergence of China economically, diplomatically, and militarily; to promote mutually beneficial trade relations with China; and to encourage China's adherence to international norms in the areas of trade, international security, and human rights.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Legislative Provisions Not Adopted

Military educational exchanges between senior officers and officials of the United States and Taiwan

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1203) that would require the Secretary of Defense to undertake a program of senior military officer and senior official exchanges with Taiwan designed to improve Taiwan's defenses against the People's Liberation Army of the People's Republic of China.

The House recedes.

Procurement sanctions against foreign persons that transfer certain defense articles and services to the People's Republic of China

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1212) that would prohibit the Secretary of Defense from purchasing goods or services from any entity that knowingly transfers an item that is on the U.S. Munitions List to the People's Republic of China.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Prohibition on engaging in certain transactions

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Report on acquisition by Iran of nuclear weapons

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1211) that would express the sense of Congress that preventing Iranian acquisition or development of weapons of mass destruction and their associated delivery systems remains the paramount goal of U.S. policy toward Iran. The provision would also require the Secretary of Defense and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to provide a report assessing the strategic implications of Iranian acquisition of nuclear weapons.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Sense of Congress on support for Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1209) that would express a sense of the Congress on support for the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT).

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees reaffirm their support for the objectives of the NPT and for all appropriate measures to strengthen the NPT and to attain its objectives. The conferees call on all parties to the NPT:

(1) to support compliance with treaty obligations and to undertake effective enforcement measures against states that are in violation of their obligations under the Treaty;

(2) to agree to establish more effective controls on enrichment and reprocessing technologies that can be used to produce materials for nuclear weapons;

(3) to expand and support the International Atomic Energy Agency efforts to inspect and monitor compliance with safeguards and standards to which all states should adhere through existing authority and the additional protocols signed by the states party to the NPT;

(4) to demonstrate the international community's unified opposition to a nuclear weapons program in Iran by supporting efforts of the United States and the European Union to prevent the Government of Iran from acquiring a nuclear weapons capability and using all appropriate diplomatic means at their disposal to convince the Government of Iran to abandon its uranium enrichment program;

(5) to support strongly the ongoing U.S. diplomatic efforts in the context of the six-party talks that seek the verifiable and irreversible disarmament of North Korea's nuclear weapons programs and to use all appropriate diplomatic means to achieve this result;

(6) to pursue diplomacy designed to address the underlying regional security problems in Northeast Asia, South Asia, and the Middle East, which would facilitate non-proliferation and disarmament efforts in those regions;

(7) to accelerate, wherever practicable, programs to safeguard and eliminate nuclear weapons-usable material to the highest standards to prevent access by terrorists and governments;

(8) to halt the use of highly enriched uranium in civilian reactors;

(9) to strengthen national and international export controls and relevant security measures as required by United Nations Security Council Resolution 1540;

(10) to agree that no state may withdraw from the NPT and escape responsibility for prior violations of the Treaty or retain access to controlled materials and equipment acquired for "peaceful" purposes;

(11) to call for reduction in the world's stockpile of nuclear weapons consistent with obligations and commitments under the Treaty, for a moratorium on production of weapons grade fissile materials, and for progress on negotiation of a fissile material cut-off treaty; and (12) to strengthen and expand support for the Proliferation Security Initiative.

TITLE XIII—COOPERATIVE THREAT REDUCTION WITH STATES OF THE FORMER SOVIET UNION

Legislative Provisions Adopted

Specification of Cooperative Threat Reduction programs and funds (sec. 1301)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1301) that would define the programs that are Cooperative Threat Reduction (CTR) programs, define the funds for CTR programs as those authorized to be appropriated in section 301 of this Act, and specify that CTR funds shall remain available for obligation for three fiscal years.

The Senate amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 1301).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Funding allocations (sec. 1302)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1302) that would authorize $415.5 million for the Cooperative Threat Reduction (CTR) program. The provision would also authorize specific amounts for each CTR program element, require notification to Congress 30 days before the Secretary of Defense obligates and expends fiscal year 2006 funds for purposes other than those specifically authorized, and provide limited authority to obligate amounts for a CTR program element in excess of the amount specifically authorized for that purpose.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 1302).

The House recedes.

Permanent waiver of restrictions on use of funds for threat reduction in states of the former Soviet Union (sec. 1303)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1304) that would provide the President with the authority for calendar years 2005, 2006, and 2007 to waive a former Soviet Union state's eligibility requirements for receiving Cooperative Threat Reduction (CTR) funds, provided that the President certifies to Congress that a waiver is important to the national security interests of the United States, and submits a more detailed report that describes both the activity or activities that prevent eligibility and a strategy, plan, or policy for addressing eligibility shortfalls.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1303) that would make permanent the President's authority to waive, on an annual basis, a former Soviet Union state's eligibility requirements for receiving CTR funds, provided that the President certifies to Congress that a waiver is important to the national security interests of the United States, and submits a more detailed report that describes both the activity or activities that prevent eligibility and a strategy, plan, or policy for addressing eligibility shortfalls.

The House recedes.

Report on elimination of impediments to threat-reduction and nonproliferation programs in the former Soviet Union (sec. 1304)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1305) that would require the President to submit to the Congress a report on impediments to the effective execution of threat reduction programs in the states of the former Soviet Union.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with a clarifying amendment.

The conferees note that despite the importance of programs and activities to assist in securing weapons of mass destruction and related materials in the states of the former Soviet Union, the effective conduct of such programs has been impeded by numerous legal and administrative disagreements regarding a variety of issues, including access to sites, liability, and taxation. However, in some cases it has been possible to resolve such disagreements through committed and high-level discussions between governments.

Repeal of requirement for annual Comptroller General assessment of annual Department of Defense report on activities and assistance under Cooperative Threat Reduction programs (sec. 1305)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1305) that would repeal the requirement for the Comptroller General to provide to Congress an assessment of the annual Department of Defense report to Congress on the Cooperative Threat Reduction programs.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Legislative Provisions Not Adopted

Authority to obligate weapons of mass destruction proliferation prevention funds for nuclear weapons storage security

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1303) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to obligate fiscal year 2006 funds appropriated for the Cooperative Threat Reduction (CTR) weapons of mass destruction proliferation prevention initiative for nuclear storage security, provided that the Secretary provides 15 day advance written notification and justification to Congress.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees note that in a February 2005 joint statement, the President of the United States and the President of the Russian Federation declared their intent to expand and deepen cooperation on nuclear security with the goal of enhancing the security of nuclear facilities. If the United States and Russia reach agreement on additional projects in this area, it may be necessary for the Department of Defense to allocate additional CTR funds for the nuclear weapons storage security program. The Department may choose to obligate funds authorized for weapons of mass destruction proliferation prevention for nuclear weapons storage security, subject to the notification and justification process described in section 1302 of this Act.

Modification of authority to use Cooperative Threat Reduction funds outside the former Soviet Union

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1304) that would modify the authority of the Department of Defense to use Cooperative Threat Reduction funds outside the former Soviet Union by changing the existing requirement for a presidential determination and certification to a requirement for a determination and certification made by the Secretary of Defense, with the concurrence of the Secretary of State.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Removal of certain restrictions on provision of cooperative threat reduction assistance

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1306) that would repeal all of the existing eligibility and certification requirements that must be met or waived in order for states of the former Soviet Union to receive Cooperative Threat Reduction assistance.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

TITLE XIV—MATTERS RELATING TO DETAINEES

Legislative Provision Adopted

Matters relating to detainees (secs. 1401–1406)

The Senate amendment contained three provisions (secs. 1074, 1075, and 1092) relating to detainees. The first provision (sec. 1074) would provide uniform standards for the interrogation of persons under the detention of the Department of Defense. The second provision (sec. 1075) would prohibit cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment or punishment of persons under the custody or control of the U.S. Government. The third provision (sec. 1092) would provide procedures for the legal review of detainees held by the Department at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

The House bill contained no similar provisions.

The House recedes with an amendment that would establish a new title of the bill addressing matters relating to detainees.

Section 1401 would designate the title as the "Detainee Treatment Act of 2005."

Section 1402 contains the text of Senate section 1074 without change.

Section 1403 contains the text of Senate section 1075 without change.

Section 1404 is a new provision.

Subsection (a) would provide an affirmative defense in any civil action or criminal prosecution against an officer, employee, member of the armed forces, or other agent of the U.S. Government, who is a U.S. person, arising out of the person's engaging in specific operational practices involving detention or interrogation of aliens who the President or his designees have determined are believed to be engaged in or associated with international terrorist activity that poses a serious, continuing, threat to the U.S., its interests, or its allies. If the practices were officially authorized and determined to be lawful at the time they were conducted, it would be a defense that the person did not know that the practices were unlawful and that a person of ordinary sense and understanding would not know that they were unlawful. Good faith reliance on advice of counsel would be an important factor, among others, to consider in assessing whether a person of ordinary sense and understanding would have known the practices to be unlawful. Nothing in this section is to be construed to limit or extinguish any defense or protection otherwise available to any person or entity from suit or civil or criminal liability, or to provide immunity from prosecution for any criminal offense by the proper authorities.

Subsection (b) would authorize the United States Government to provide or employ counsel, pay counsel fees, court costs, bail, and other expenses incident to the representation of any such person with respect to any civil action or criminal prosecution arising out of practices described in subsection (a), whether brought inside or outside the U.S., under the same conditions and to the same extent to which such services and payments are authorized under section 1037 of title 10, United States Code.

Section 1405 would address the procedures for legal review of detainees held by the Department.

Subsection (a) would require the Secretary of Defense to submit the Department of Defense procedures for status review of detainees at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and in Afghanistan, and Iraq to the appropriate congressional committees. It would also require that the official designated by the President or Secretary of Defense to be the final review authority with respect to the determinations of the administrative tribunals (the "Designated Civilian Official") be a civilian officer of the Department of Defense who is appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. The conferees expect the Designated Civilian Official to accomplish final review of the decisions of the tribunals in an expeditious fashion.

Subsection (b) would require that a Combatant Status Review Tribunal and an Administrative Review Board (or similar or successor administrative tribunal or board) for detainees at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba determine whether any statement derived from or relating to a detainee was obtained as a result of coercion and if so, the probative value (if any) of any such statement.

Subsection (c) would require the Secretary of Defense to submit a report on any modification to the procedures submitted under subsection (a).

Subsection (d) would require the Secretary of Defense to submit to Congress an annual report on the annual review process for aliens in the custody of the Department of Defense outside the United States.

Subsection (e) would provide for judicial review of detainees held at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

Paragraph (1) would amend section 2241 of title 28, United States Code, to provide that, except as provided in this section, no court, justice, or judge shall have jurisdiction to hear or consider: (1) an application for a writ of habeas corpus filed by or on behalf of an alien detained by the Department at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba; or (2) any other action against the United States or its agents relating to any aspect of such detention by an alien who remains in military custody or for whom the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit has determined that such detention was proper.

Paragraph (2) would provide for direct judicial review, in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, of the validity of any final decision of a Combatant Status Review Tribunal that an alien detained by the Department of Defense at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba is properly detained as an enemy combatant.

Paragraph (3) would provide for direct judicial review, in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, of the validity of any final decision pursuant to Military Commission Order No. 1 dated August 31, 2005, (or any successor military order) regarding an alien detained by the Department at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

Paragraph (4) would provide that the Secretary shall be the named respondent in any appeal under this provision.

Subsection (f) would provide that nothing in section 1705 shall be construed to confer any constitutional right on an alien detained as an enemy combatant outside the United States.

Subsection (g) would define the term "United States."

Subsection (h) would establish the effective date of the provision.

Section 1406 is a new provision that would require the Secretary to prescribe policies to ensure that all personnel of Iraqi military forces who are trained by Department personnel or contractors receive training regarding the international obligations and laws applicable to the humane detention of detainees, including protections afforded under the Geneva Conventions and the Convention against Torture. It would also require that the unclassified portions of the Army Field Manual on Intelligence Interrogation be translated into Arabic and other appropriate languages for use by the Iraqi security forces, and be distributed to appropriate officials of the Iraqi government. American military personnel are trained and encouraged to lead by example. The conferees intend that our personnel set the example for the new Iraqi democracy by demonstrating the commitment to the rule of law that is essential to armed forces in a democratic state. The conferees also urge that the translated version of the Field Manual be given broad distribution throughout the Iraqi security forces, including to field and company-grade officers and noncommissioned officers.

The Senate amendment contained a similar title (title XIV) that would authorize $50.0 billion for ongoing operations in Iraq and Afghanistan. The provision also contained reporting requirements and general provisions.

The conferees recommend a title that provides new authorization of appropriations of $50.0 billion for ongoing operations in Iraq and Afghanistan. The title also contains reporting requirements and general provisions.

Items of Special Interest

Advanced First Responder Network

The conferees are aware of the efforts to deploy the Advanced First Responder Network (AFRN) in Iraq which will begin to address: (1) the requirement of mission-critical public-safety communications capabilities and allow for coordination of security planning and execution; (2) rapid data collection and analysis of changing security threats; (3) rapid coordination and deployment of security assets to address threats; (4) effective planning to prevent and reduce future security threats; and (5) a more secure environment that will foster democracy and economic development. The AFRN infrastructure in Iraq has been designed to accommodate the entire country, and critical infrastructure such as pipelines. The conferees support this effort and, with funds available in this legislation and prior appropriations acts, encourage that reconstruction efforts to continue to place a high value on completion of an integrated security network with the deployment of AFRN and related advanced networks.

The Senate amendment would authorize appropriations totaling $12,044.5 million for military construction and family housing programs.

The conferees agree to authorize appropriations of $12,419.5 million for the military construction and family housing accounts of the Department for fiscal year 2006. When the impact of $252.9 million in prior year rescissions enacted in the Military Construction, Quality of Life, and Veterans Appropriations Act, 2006 (Public Law 109–114) is included, the conference agreement is consistent with a budget authority level of $12,166.6 million for military construction and family housing programs.

The following tables provide the project-level authorizations for the military construction funding authorized in division B of this Act and summarize that funding by account.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Army use of alternate authorities to acquire unaccompanied housing

The conferees note that the Department of the Army is carrying out programs to transform its force structure and global presence within the next five years. This transformation will result in the permanent relocation among Army installations of over 100,000 unaccompanied soldiers. The Department of the Army is currently in the process of developing an investment strategy to fund the construction of permanent facilities to support these transformation initiatives.

The conferees also note that Congress has granted authority to the Department of the Army to enter into agreements with eligible entities to provide for the acquisition or construction of military unaccompanied housing units on or near military installations. Similar authorities have been used to dramatically improve the quality of family housing for the nation's military personnel.

The conferees encourage the Secretary of the Army to consider the use of alternate authorities for the construction of unaccompanied housing in the development of plans for permanent facilities at installations planned for substantial increases in the number of unaccompanied personnel.

Because the conference report was not adopted prior to October 1, 2005, this provision is no longer required and was not included in the conference agreement.

TITLE XXVIII—GENERAL PROVISIONS

Items of Special Interest

Joint urban operations training facilities

The conferees note that on November 10, 2005, the Under Secretary of Defense for Personnel and Readiness (OUSD (P&R)) submitted the report requested by the Senate Committee on Armed Services three years ago on Department of Defense requirements for military operations in urban terrain (MOUT) training facilities.

The Department reported that it had established a Joint Urban Training Working Group under Joint Forces Command to identify requirements and a Joint Urban Operations Training Review Group to prioritize budget requests for Joint Urban Operations facilities and capabilities.

The conferees commend the Department for establishing these new joint policy groups. However, the conferees are concerned that it has taken three years to do so and agree with the Department's report that "much more needs to be done." The conferees are disappointed that, despite the efforts of the Department to date, the Department has yet to establish a strategy for urban operations training, a requirements baseline, or to prioritize MOUT projects and capabilities across the Department in its budget requests.

The conferees further note that on December 8, 2005, the Government Accountability Office (GAO) released its assessment of this effort and stated that "Since 2002, the Department has made limited progress in developing an overall joint strategy for urban operations training and related facility and training requirements". The GAO review found that the Department still lacks an agreed strategy, and facility and training requirements for joint urban operations training, and that there are few opportunities today for truly joint training under joint headquarters, despite longstanding Department policy that forces train as they fight.

The conferees urge the Department, in particular (OUSD (P&R)) and Joint Forces Command, to develop as soon as possible a joint training strategy for urban operations that will allow the total force to make the best possible use of existing and planned MOUT facilities to improve joint and interagency capabilities in this critical area; to develop a requirements baseline for MOUT facilities based on that strategy; and to assess and prioritize the MOUT projects requested by the services or Special Operations Command in the fiscal year 2007 budget, and in future budget requests, against this baseline, in order to eliminate unnecessary duplication of facilities.

The conferees intend for this provision to facilitate the business transformation and financial management reform initiatives established by the Department of Defense to improve the transparency and real-time access to the Department's cost accounting and contract management information using state-of-the-art technology and web-based software programs. The conferees expect that increased oversight of construction contract information will result in a greater degree of diligence in the management of contract cost growth and a more efficient use of taxpayer dollars. The conferees encourage the Secretary to make the information required by this provision available on the Department's website.

Modification of cost variation authority (sec. 2804)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2802) that would amend section 2853 of title 10, United States Code, to clarify that the cost of a military construction project or a project for the construction, improvement, or acquisition of a military family housing cannot be decreased or increased by more than 25 percent.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

One-year extension of temporary, limited authority to use operation and maintenance funds for construction projects outside the United States (sec. 2809)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2805) that would extend the authority provided by section 2808 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2004 (Public Law 108–136) for 1 year and amend the reporting requirement for the authority.

This provision would increase thresholds in section 2805(a)(1) of title 10, United States Code, to facilitate the construction of child development centers.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would direct the secretary of each military service to submit a report by March 16, 2006, on the inventory and management of GFO housing in the NCR.

The conferees note that the report submitted by the Secretary of Defense to Congress on June 3, 2005, in response to section 2802 of the Ronald W. Reagan National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2005 (Public Law 108–375) did not satisfy the intent of the conferees. The conferees intend for the secretary of each military department to submit a report containing an analytical assessment of requirements for general and flag officer housing in the National Capital Region, including unique force protection concerns, the potential to rely on the local commercial real estate market, and possible alternate methods for the acquisition, operations, and maintenance of GFO houses. These assessments should not rely upon the presumption that the existing inventory of government-owned housing units must be retained. The conferees expect that the reports will provide a basis for further deliberations to address GFO housing requirements over the long-term, while reducing costs associated with these units.

Subtitle B—Real Property and Facilities Administration

Consolidation of Department of Defense land acquisition authorities and limitations on use of such authorities (sec. 2821)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2811) that would consolidate provisions of chapter 159 of title 10, United States Code, which govern the acquisition of land by the Department of Defense, and make several technical corrections.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 2881)

The Senate recedes with a technical amendment.

Modification of authorities on agreements to limit encroachments and other constraints on military training, testing, and operations (sec. 2822)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2822) that would modify section 2684a of title 10, United States Code, to clarify that agreements to limit encroachments and other constraints on military training, testing, and operations authorized under that section may include real property that is in the vicinity of, or ecologically related to, a military installation or the airspace of such installation. The provision would require that agreements authorized under that section between the Secretary of Defense, or the service secretaries, and eligible third party entities provide for equal sharing of the acquisition costs of the real property and real property interests between the Department of Defense and the partner entities. The Senate provision would allow the Secretary concerned to waive the requirement for equal sharing of the acquisition costs if the Secretary concerned determined that the agreement is essential to accomplish the mission of the installation and the Secretary concerned provided 21-days advance notice to Congress. The Senate provision would provide that the acquisition cost of any lesser interest in real property would not exceed 70 percent of the appraised value of the property. The Senate provision would also include an annual reporting requirement on implementation of projects undertaken pursuant to this authority.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary concerned to determine the appropriate portion of the acquisition costs to be borne by the United States. The conference amendment would also provide that the acquisition costs borne by the United States would not exceed the fair market value of the property interest that could be transferred to the United States upon the request of the Secretary concerned under the statute. The conference amendment would specify that the contribution of third-party entities to the acquisition costs would include, with the approval of the Secretary concerned, any combination of the following: the provision of funds (including funds received by such entity or entities from a federal, state, or local agency outside the Department in connection with a federal, state, or local program); the provision of in-kind services (including services related to the acquisition or maintenance of such real property or interest in real property); or the exchange or donation of real property or any interest in real property. The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary concerned to submit to Congress an economic analysis which demonstrates the economic benefit of the conveyance to the government, before entering into a contract for the conveyance of all or part of a utility system. The amendment would amend section 2688(c)(1) of Title 10, United States Code, to change the requirement for the Secretary concerned to receive fair market value for conveyed utility systems. The amendment would also limit the contract term for a contract to convey utility systems to 10 years, and would provide authorization for the Secretary concerned to exceed 10 years, but not to exceed 50 years, if the Secretary concerned determined the longer term to be cost effective as demonstrated in the economic analysis. The amendment would also limit in fiscal years 2006 and 2007 the number of contracts to be entered into under Section 2688 of Title 10, United States Code. The amendment would also amend reporting requirements contained in the provision in the House bill and would add a requirement for the Government Accountability Office to submit to the congressional defense committees by August 1, 2006 a report evaluating the changes made by the Department of Defense in the management of the utilities privatization program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Department of Defense's request to Congress for authorization to expand the types of proceeds received from the disposal of surplus property is consistent with Congressional intent to allow the Department of Defense to efficiently manage facility and infrastructure assets. While the conferees support additional flexibility in the manner in which it seeks value in the disposal of its assets, the conferees are concerned that the expanded authority could potentially result in adverse effects, such as reduced Department and congressional oversight of the military construction program, and decisions to carry out land disposals specifically to receive military construction projects, rather than with consideration to military requirements over the long-term. The conferees are also concerned that the expanded authority would impose complex requirements on the General Services Administration in the process of carrying out property disposals in exchange for military construction. As such, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to fully consider the potential effects of expanding the land exchange program, and, if warranted, to resubmit a legislative proposal in the future which addresses such concerns.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2893) that would require the Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, other appropriate federal agencies, and state, tribal, and local government officials, to complete an identification not later than May 31, 2007, of the environmental conditions of the real property of each military installation approved for closure or realignment under the 2005 round of defense base closure and realignment in accordance with section 120(h)(4) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980, (42 U.S.C. 9620(h)(4)). The Senate provision would also require the Secretary to coordinate with appropriate federal, state, tribal, and local government officials to expedite the environmental response at military installations approved for closure or realignment under the 2005 round of defense base closure and realignment. The provision would also require the Secretary to report the progress made in carrying out this section in the annual environmental report to Congress.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

This provision would also raise the threshold of the cost of a construction project intended solely to correct a deficiency that is life-threatening, health-threatening, or safety-threatening from $3.0 million to $4.0 million.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Items of Special Interest

Disposition of weapons-usable plutonium at Savannah River, South Carolina

The conferees note that section 4306 of the Atomic Energy Defense Act (50 U.S.C. 2566) requires the Secretary of Energy to make impact assistance payments to the State of South Carolina, if the Department of Energy fails to achieve certain interim and long-term milestones in the conversion of plutonium stored at the Savannah River Site. The conferees remain supportive of this program and of the commitments made to the State of South Carolina. The conferees urge the Department to remain mindful of these impending payments and to request a budget for fiscal year 2007 and thereafter that would keep the mixed oxide fuel facility construction on a schedule to make the payment of impact assistance unnecessary.

Nanotechnology Enterprise Development Center

The conferees direct the Secretary of Energy to submit a report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives within 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act setting forth the contribution, if any, of the Nanotechnology Enterprise Development Center to the Stockpile Stewardship Program or to the programmatic activities of the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA). The report shall include a description of any contribution of the center to the national security of the United States and a justification for using atomic energy defense funds available to the NNSA for the establishment of the center.

National laboratory work on force protection technologies

The conferees note that the Department of Energy national laboratories have provided exceptional technical assistance to the Department of Defense in testing and fielding various types of equipment to improve force protection for U.S. military personnel engaged in combat operations. The conferees urge the Departments of Energy and Defense to continue to work together to utilize the expertise resident in the national laboratories to research, develop, and field those force protection technologies that can improve combat capabilities and reduce combat casualties. The conferees support the continued use by the Department of Energy of its existing authority to waive, where appropriate, certain overhead charges associated with national laboratory work conducted for the Department of Defense.

In the event that the Department of Energy makes the decision, under existing authorities, to waive any charges other than the federal administrative charge, the Secretary of Energy shall provide notification to the congressional defense committees within 30 days of issuing such a decision. The notification shall include a description of the force protection technologies work, the fees waived, and the impact, if any, to overhead rates for other programs at the national laboratory.

Legislative Provisions Adopted

Subtitle A—National Security Programs Authorizations

National Nuclear Security Administration (sec. 3101)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 3101) that would authorize $9.1 billion for the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA), including funds for weapons activities, defense nuclear nonproliferation programs, naval reactor programs, and the Office of the Administrator.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 3101) that would authorize $9.4 billion.

The conferees agree to authorize $9.2 billion for the NNSA.

The budget request included $6.6 billion for weapons activities. The House bill would authorize $6.5 billion, a decrease of $174.4 million below the budget request. The Senate amendment would authorize $6.6 billion, a decrease of $39.8 million below the budget request. The conferees agree to authorize $6.4 billion, a decrease of $196.2 million below the budget request. Within weapons activities, the conferees agree to authorize $605.8 million for advanced simulation and computing, a decrease of $55.0 million below the budget request. The conferees note that this reduction is without prejudice. Within weapons activities, the conferees also agree to authorize $2.1 billion for campaigns, an increase of $64.2 million above the budget request. The conferees agree to authorize a budget realignment of $140.6 million within campaigns to allow funding adjustments across the program elements which make up campaigns.

The budget request included $174.4 million for environmental projects and operations within NNSA. The House bill and the Senate amendment would authorize no funds for these activities within the NNSA. The conferees believe that the defense environmental cleanup program exists to address the environmental legacy from Cold War missions at Department of Energy sites. The conferees agree to authorize no funds within NNSA for these activities but to authorize funds for these activities within defense environmental cleanup. elsewhere in this Act. The conferees agree that this action is consistent with the provisions of title 32 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2000 (Public Law 106–65), which established the NNSA.

The budget request included $1.6 billion for defense nuclear nonproliferation. The conferees agree to authorize $1.6 billion, a decrease of $6.1 million below the budget request. The conferees agree to provide an additional $83.6 million in funding for international nuclear materials protection and cooperation to implement the agreements entered into by the Russian Federation and the United States at the Bratislava Summit to accelerate improvements to security at certain Russian nuclear weapons storage sites. The conferees agree to authorize $13.0 million for Project 06–D–180, National Security Laboratory at the Pacific Northwest National Laboratory, an increase of $8.0 million above the budget request. The additional funds are to be used to complete project engineering and design and to initiate construction on the research facility needed to replace facilities being vacated due to the environmental cleanup activities at the Hanford Site 300 Area.

Defense environmental cleanup (sec. 3102)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 3102) that would authorize $6.3 billion for the Department of Energy for defense environmental management (EM) activities for fiscal year 2006, including funds for defense site acceleration completion and defense environmental services.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 3102) that would authorize $6.2 billion for defense environmental management.

The conferees agree to authorize $6.2 billion for defense environmental cleanup, an increase of $177.3 million above the budget request. Defense environmental cleanup comprises those activities formerly termed defense environmental management.

The conferees note that the statement of managers accompanying the Energy and Water Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2006 (Public Law 109–103) provides funding for defense environmental cleanup in a new budget structure, which provides funding by site rather than by the program elements contained in the President's budget request for fiscal year 2006. The conferees direct the Department to submit with the budget request for fiscal year 2007 a funding crosswalk between the budget structure as requested and as appropriated for fiscal year 2006. The conferees also direct the Department to prepare a 5–year funding plan for the environmental cleanup program.

Other defense activities (sec. 3103)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 3103) that would authorize $636.0 million for the Department of Energy for other defense activities for fiscal year 2006, the amount of the budget request.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 3103) that would authorize $563.4 million for the Department for other defense activities, a decrease of $72.6 million below the budget request.

The conferees agree to authorize $642.0 million, an increase of $6.0 million above the budget request.

Defense nuclear waste disposal (sec. 3104)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 3104) that would authorize $351.4 million for defense nuclear waste disposal.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 3104) that would authorize $301.4 million for defense nuclear waste disposal.

The conferees agree to include a provision that would authorize $350.0 million, a decrease of $1.4 million below the budget request.

Subtitle B—Other Matters

Reliable Replacement Warhead program (sec. 3111)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 3111) that would authorize the Secretary of Energy to carry out a Reliable Replacement Warhead program. The provision would establish objectives for the program and require reports to Congress.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision. In the Senate report accompanying S. 1042 (S. Rept. 109–69) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2006, the Senate authorized funds for the program and specified goals for the program.

The Senate recedes with a technical amendment that would add the Secretaries of Defense and Energy to the reporting requirement.

The conferees support the goal of continuing to ensure that the nuclear weapons stockpile remains safe, secure, and reliable. The conferees believe that the Reliable Replacement Warhead program is essential to the achievement of this goal and support its establishment with the objectives as defined in the provision, and as further described in the committee reports of the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives for fiscal year 2006.

Rocky Flats Environmental Technology Site (sec. 3112)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 3116) that would authorize up to $10.0 million for the purchase of certain mineral rights at the Department of Energy Rocky Flats Environmental Technology Site by the Secretary of Energy and for payment to extinguish all natural resource damage liability at the site.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would specify section 107 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (42 U.S.C. 9607) as the provision of law applicable to natural resource damage liability.

Report on compliance with Design Basis Threat issued by Department of Energy in 2005 (sec. 3113)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 3111) that would require the Secretary of Energy to submit to the congressional defense committees a report describing plans for upgrading the security posture of the Department of Energy and the National Nuclear Security Administration in response to the design basis threat issued by the Secretary in October 2004.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment that would: (1) identify the design basis threat issued by the Department in November 2005 as the design basis threat to be analyzed in the report; (2) require a comparison of the security requirements contained in the design basis threat issued in May 2003 with those contained in the design basis threat issued in November 2005; and (3) require a review by the Government Accountability Office not later than 1 year after enactment of this Act of the Department's plan for complying with the design basis threat of November 2005.

Reports associated with Waste Treatment and Immobilization Plant Project, Hanford Site, Richland, Washington (sec. 3114)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 3112) that would require the Secretary of Energy to submit to the congressional defense committees an independent cost estimate prepared by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers for the Waste Treatment and Immobilization Plant Project at the Department of Energy Hanford Site.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary to submit to the congressional defense committees reports received by the Department from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers documenting any evaluation or validation of costs, schedule, and technical issues, including seismic issues, associated with the Waste Treatment and Immobilization Plant Project.

The conferees direct the Secretary to develop an independent cost estimate prior to concluding negotiations on the cost of any additions to work scope for contracts under the Waste Treatment and Immobilization Plant Project, if the Department contracting officer makes an affirmative determination that a change in scope has occurred. The conferees further direct the Secretary to notify the congressional defense committees 30 days prior to the restart of those construction activities that were suspended due to the revision of the seismic criteria for either the High-Level Waste facility or the Pretreatment facility of the Waste Treatment and Immobilization Plant Project.

Report on assistance for a comprehensive inventory of Russian nonstrategic nuclear weapons (sec. 3115)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 3112) that would require the Secretary of Energy, in consultation with the Secretary of Defense, to provide a report containing an evaluation of efforts by the United States to encourage or facilitate a proper accounting for and securing of the nonstrategic nuclear weapons of the Russian Federation.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would change the due date for the reporting requirement to April 15, 2006.

Report on international border security programs (sec. 3116)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 3113) that would require the Secretary of Energy, in consultation with the Secretaries of Defense, State and, as appropriate, Homeland Security, to submit a report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives on the management of border security programs in the countries of the former Soviet Union and in other countries.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Savannah River National Laboratory (sec. 3117)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 3115) that would designate the Savannah River National Laboratory as a participating laboratory in the Department of Energy laboratory directed research and development program.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Prohibition on use of funds for robust nuclear earth penetrator

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 3117) that would prohibit the use of any funds authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Energy to be made available for the robust nuclear earth penetrator (RNEP).

The House bill contained no similar provision. The House authorized a related study effort for penetrators to hold at risk hard and deeply buried targets within the Department of Defense elsewhere in this Act.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees agree to authorize no funding for the RNEP study under the Department of Energy, but instead authorize a related study effort within the Department of Defense elsewhere in this Act. The conference outcome is reflected in the tables of this report.

Report on advanced technologies for nuclear power reactors in the United States

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 3119) that would require the Secretary of Energy to submit to Congress a report containing a description and assessment of technologies under development that offer the potential to further enhance the safety and proliferation-resistance of nuclear power reactors.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees note that the Department of Energy leads the federal government's efforts to develop new nuclear energy generation technologies to meet energy goals, to develop advanced, proliferation-resistant nuclear fuel technologies that maximize energy from nuclear fuel, and to maintain and enhance the national nuclear technology infrastructure. The conferees support these objectives for the purpose of enhancing both the energy and economic security of the United States and seek to further efforts to better communicate the advancements being made towards these objectives to the general public.

The Secretary of Energy shall submit to Congress a report on advanced technologies for nuclear power reactors in the United States. The report shall include a description and assessment of the following: (1) technologies under development for advanced nuclear power reactors that offer the potential for further enhancements of the safety performance of nuclear power reactors, and (2) technologies under development for advanced nuclear power reactors that offer the potential for further enhancements of proliferation-resistant nuclear power reactors. The information in the report shall be presented in a manner and format that facilitates the dissemination of such information to, and the ready understanding of such information by, members of the general public, not later than six months after the date of enactment of this Act.

Sense of the Senate regarding interim reports on residual beryllium contamination at Department of Energy vendor facilities

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 3118) that would state the sense of the Senate regarding interim reports on residual beryllium contamination at Department of Energy vendor facilities, and would urge the Director of the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH) to provide to Congress interim reports on residual beryllium contamination at such facilities not later than 14 days after completing the internal review of such reports.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees note that section 3169 of the Ronald W. Reagan National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2005 (Public Law 108-375; 42 U.S.C. 7384 note) requires NIOSH to submit not later than December 31, 2006, an update to the October 2003 report of NIOSH on residual beryllium contamination at Department vendor facilities.

The conferees note that workers at Department vendor facilities who were potentially exposed to beryllium contamination should be informed at the earliest opportunity once the results of the site-specific study are available. The conferees note that NIOSH has completed its evaluation of residual beryllium contamination at some Department vendor facilities. The conferees direct the Secretary of Energy to request the Director of NIOSH: (1) to provide to Congress and the Department Office of Environment, Safety and Health interim reports on residual beryllium contamination at Department vendor facilities not later than 14 days after completing the internal review of such reports; and (2) to publish in the Federal Register summaries of the findings of such reports, including the dates of any significant residual beryllium contamination, at such time as the reports are provided to the Department Office of Environment, Safety and Health.

TITLE XXXII—DEFENSE NUCLEAR FACILITIES SAFETY BOARD

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Defense Nuclear Facilities Safety Board (sec. 3201)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 3201) that would authorize $22.0 million for the Defense Nuclear Facilities Safety Board, the amount of the budget request.

The Senate amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 3201). The conference agreement includes this provision.

TITLE XXXIII—NATIONAL DEFENSE STOCKPILE

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Authorized uses of National Defense Stockpile funds (sec. 3301)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 3301) that would authorize $52.1 million from the National Defense Stockpile Transaction Fund for the operation and maintenance of the National Defense Stockpile for fiscal year 2006. The provision would also permit the use of additional funds for extraordinary or emergency conditions 45 days after Congress receives notification.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Revisions to required receipt objectives for previously authorized disposals from National Defense Stockpile (sec. 3302)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 3301) that would authorize increased sales of certain materials in the National Defense Stockpile through the end of fiscal year 2013.

The House bill contained similar provisions (secs. 3302–3303).

The House recedes.

Authorization for disposal of tungsten ores and concentrates (sec. 3303)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 3302) that would authorize the sale of up to 8.0 million pounds of tungsten from the National Defense Stockpile in fiscal year 2006.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Disposal of ferromanganese (sec. 3304)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 3303) that would authorize the disposal of up to 75,000 tons of ferromanganese from the National Defense Stockpile during fiscal year 2006. If that amount is disposed of before September 30, 2006, up to an additional 25,000 tons may be disposed of before that date. This additional disposal of ferromanganese may take place only if the Secretary of Defense submits written certification to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives, not later than 30 days before the commencement of disposal, that: (1) the disposal of the additional ferromanganese is in the interest of national defense; (2) the disposal will not cause undue disruption to the usual markets of producers and processors of ferromanganese in the United States; and (3) the disposal is consistent with the requirements and purpose of the National Defense Stockpile.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

TITLE XXXIV—NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVES

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Authorization of appropriations (sec. 3401)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 3401) that would authorize $18.5 million for the operation and maintenance of the Naval Petroleum and Oil Shale Reserves.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

TITLE XXXV—MARITIME ADMINISTRATION

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Maritime administration (secs. 3501–3510)

The House bill contained provisions (sec. 3501-3505) that would authorize funds for fiscal year 2006, authorize payments for State and regional maritime academies, make modifications to the maintenance and repair pilot program, authorize improvements to the National Defense Tank Vessel Construction Assistance Program, and authorize improvements to the Maritime Administration (MARAD) vessel disposal program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would: (1) authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2006 for operations and training, administrative expenses related to loan guarantee commitments under the title XI program, and for expenses to dispose of obsolete vessels in the National Defense Reserve Fleet; (2) authorize payments for State and regional maritime academies; (3) modify the maintenance and repair pilot program; (4) authorize improvements to the National Defense Tank Vessel Construction Assistance Program; (5) authorize improvements to the MARAD vessel disposal program; (6) authorize a new program to assist small shipyards and maritime communities; (7) transfer authority over the title XI non-fishing vessel loan guarantee decisions to the Maritime Administrator and make other improvements to the title XI program; (8) provide for a technical correction related to certain intermodal facilities; (9) provide for expanded use of the United States Maritime Service; and (10) provide certain awards and medals free of charge.

Section 3503 would direct the Secretary of Transportation to carry out the domestic maintenance and repair pilot program authorized in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2004 (Public Law 108-136) for at least one vessel under a Military Security Program (MSP) contract. The amendment would allow for reimbursement of the cost differential between performing qualified maintenance and repair work in the United States as opposed to performing it overseas. Qualified maintenance or repair work would include work identified before and during the Coast Guard-required vessel inspection and survey process, including, but not limited to, cutting out and replacing the hull structure; removal, repair, or replacement of machinery and equipment of all types; and repair of internal and external coatings. This section authorizes the Secretary to issue an interim rule, and the conferees urge the Secretary to work with the MSP contractors to establish a viable, sustainable program capable of accommodating more vessels, in addition to providing contractors' assistance in locating qualified maintenance and repair facilities in the U.S. in the geographic area in which a contracted vessel normally operates.

Section 3504 requires the Secretary of Transportation, to the extent of the availability of appropriations, to enter into a contract with a proposed purchaser and proposed shipbuilder for the construction of a product tank vessel under the National Defense Tank Vessel Construction Program. This section also eliminates the limitation that only allows the program to fund up to 75 percent of the actual construction costs of the vessel.

Section 3505 would repeal obsolete requirements of title 35 of the Floyd D. Spence National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2001 (Public Law 106-398), and would require the development of a comprehensive management program consistent with recommendations made by the Government Accountability Office. The plan for implementation of this program is due to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate 180 days from enactment of this Act. If this plan is not delivered within 180 days, the Secretary would be required to award a contract for the private management of the obsolete vessel disposal program after an open, competitive bid process. The amendment would authorize the title transfer of obsolete vessels for disposal as artificial reefs at a time deemed appropriate by the Secretary.

Section 3506 would authorize the MARAD to establish a loan, loan guarantee, and grant program to assist small shipyards to make capital improvements and improve maritime training programs for small communities largely served by the maritime industry. The conferees encourage the Secretary to administer the program established by this section in a manner that is consistent with procedural safeguards contained in section 1104A of the Merchant Marine Act, such as those providing for assessing economic soundness, monitoring, review of applications, and agreements with obligors under that section, and with other Federal laws and standards applicable to similar Federal programs as determined appropriate by the Secretary.

Section 3507 would make technical and substantive amendments to title XI of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 U.S.C. App. 1274), which authorizes the Maritime Guaranteed Loan Program. The conferees intend for the MARAD to retain adequate resources with sufficient expertise to perform all functions of this program without requiring assistance from the Department of Transportation or other agencies. The conferees also agree that the decision to subject loan guarantee applications to a third-party independent analysis should be based on risk factors enumerated in section 1104A(f) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended by this Act. The conferees agree there should be no rule, regulation, or procedure governing the Maritime Guaranteed Loan Program that requires a third-party independent analysis for all applications without regard to these risk factors. When an independent analysis is required, the conferees would expect only experts in maritime finance or operations be funded to conduct the analysis.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at any time to consider a conference report to accompany H.R. 1815; that all points of order against the conference report and against its consideration be waived; that the conference report be considered as read; that the conference report be debatable for 40 minutes equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Armed Services.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. KUCINICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this report contains hundreds, if not over a thousand pages. Is that my understanding?

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield under his reservation?

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DREIER. Let me just say that this is the conference report that has been out there, has been widely available, and has been written about and addressed by the media and Members.

I know that both the minority and the majority are very enthusiastic about the prospect of moving this extraordinarily important defense authorization conference report as expeditiously as possible, and I thank my friend for yielding.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

VACATING ORDERING OF YEAS AND NAYS ON HOUSE RESOLUTION 632, WAIVING REQUIREMENT OF CLAUSE 6(a) OF RULE XIII WITH RESPECT TO CONSIDERATION OF CERTAIN RESOLUTIONS

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House vacate the ordering of the yeas and nays on adoption of House Resolution 632 to the end that the Chair may put the question on the resolution de novo.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. KUCINICH. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I will propound the request again.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House vacate the ordering of the yeas and nays on adoption of House Resolution 632 to the end that the Chair may put the question on the resolution de novo.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 1815, NATIONAL DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 2006

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the order of the House of today, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 1815) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2006 for military activities of the Department of Defense, for military construction, and for defense activities of the Department of Energy, to prescribe military personnel strengths for such fiscal year, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the conference report is considered read.

(For conference report and statement, see prior proceedings of the House of today.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. HUNTER) and the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. SKELTON) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report now under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

To my colleagues who have labored long and hard to get this Defense bill to the floor and to get the conference to the floor, I want to thank everyone. This is a very, very important bill. It does wonderful things for our men and women in uniform.

We have a 3.1 percent pay raise across the board. We have TRICARE expansion. We have an expansion of hazardous duty pay and an expansion of combat pay. We have a very substantial section devoted, some $76 billion, to modernization and some $70 billion to research development and testing. We have a very substantial military construction section that will accrue to the benefit of all of our people in uniform who are concerned about having adequate housing and a good place to work. And most important, Mr. Speaker, this bill moves lots of ammunition, lots of armor, lots of equipment to our people in the warfighting theaters in Iraq and Afghanistan, and it provides also for a $50 billion supplemental authorization to enable us to bridge the time between now and the next supplemental that we can see coming down the pike next year.

This answers our call to duty, Mr. Speaker, which is to provide the tools to our men and women in uniform to win the war against terror. And let me just say at this point, Mr. Speaker, that we could not have done this, especially in such a short period of time, if we did not have such extraordinary members on the House Armed Services Committee, Democrat and Republican, of whom I am very proud; and a wonderful staff which has worked in some cases 16- and 18-hour days to bring this bill to fruition and to work this conference report with a very, very short time schedule.

I want to point out, first, my friend, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. SKELTON), who is a wonderful friend and partner in this endeavor to serve our people in uniform. He has just done a great job working with me and working with his members. Our ranking members, our chairmen of the subcommittees all have done a wonderful job, as have all of our members right down through the entire ranks of the members of the Armed Services Committee.

So this is a good bill, Mr. Speaker. It provides the tools for our men and women to do the job. I also want to point out the fact that we have increased 10,000 Army and 1,000 Marine active-duty personnel in this bill. That is a very important point, Mr. Speaker, because we have cut the Army over the last 15 years from 18 divisions to only 10.

It is important to move additional personnel. Right now we have more people on the ground under the President's license to call up more people; but we think it is important to move the official end strengths, and we have done that in this bill.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have a great bill, and I want to thank all the Members who have participated.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I first wanted to ask the chairman a question, because I am not sure I heard him a moment ago. Does the chairman confirm that this conference report is the report of the conferees as signed and intended to come to the floor as it was on 3 p.m. Friday?

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SKELTON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I want to assure my friend that the report that was just filed is the exact precise same report, without a comma changed, that was in fact signed by all members, Democrat and Republican.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman, and I rise in strong support of this conference report. Once again, I am proud to be part of the process that delivers our troops the support they need.

Let me take this moment to commend our chairman, Mr. HUNTER, for his work on this bill. This is important work, and I applaud all the members of the Armed Services Committee on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. Speaker, I submit for the RECORD at this point two letters, one signed by JOHN WARNER and CARL LEVIN and one signed by Erin Conaton on my behalf.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES,
Washington, DC, December 18, 2005.

Hon. DUNCAN HUNTER,
Chairman, Armed Services Committee, Chairman, National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2006 Conference, Washington, DC.

DEAR DUNCAN: On Friday, December 16, we joined you and Ike Skelton in conducting the final meeting of the conferees along with other Members of the Senate and House.

At the conclusion of the meeting the "base bill" was agreed upon and signatures of Republican and Democratic Committee Members were requested and affixed to the Conference Report with the expectation that the House, following the customary procedure, would be the first chamber to file. It was our further understanding that this would be done Friday evening.

We are returning to you the signatures of the Senate conferees on the condition that there are no changes made in the "base bill" and Conference Report and that the House obtain a Rule which precludes any further amendment.

You have shown strong leadership during this very brief and unusual conference period and we have confidence that you can achieve passage in the House of the "base bill". We believe it is in the interest of the Nation aud the men and women of the Armed Forces that our Conference Report as agreed to on December 16 becomes law.

Sincerely,

CARL LEVIN,
Ranking Member.
JOHN WARNER,
Chairman.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES,
Washington, DC, December 18, 2005.

On Mr. Shelton's behalf, I am returning the signatures of the House Democratic conferees on the condition that there be no changes made in the "base bill" and Conference Report and that we obtain a Rule which precludes any further amendment. The signatures of the outside Democratic conferees remain attached to the conference report with the same understanding. Thank you very much.

Sincerely,

ERIN CONATA,
Minority Staff Director.

As most of you know, this conference report was ready to be filed Friday at 5 o'clock. The attempt to insert new and unrelated material into this defense authorization bill was wrong. It would have jeopardized the many good things in this package for the troops. I am very pleased that the Republican leadership reconsidered and I thank the Chairman for his efforts to restore the conference report to its original form.

This is a good bill. There are many things in this bill about which we all can be proud. I have long argued that we need more troops, and this bill raises end strength for the Army by 30,000 and for the Marine Corps by 4,000. It delivers our service members a well-earned 3.1% pay raise. We can never put a value on the service of those who pay the ultimate price in defense of our freedom, but this conference report increases the death gratuity for all active and activated service members to $100,000, retroactive to October 7, 2001. And for the first time ever, all reservists who agree to continue service in the Selected Reserves will have an opportunity, depending on their status, to buy into a government subsidized TRICARE Standard health care program for themselves and their families.

While much of our attention is focused on the current wars we're fighting, we must not lose sight of other security challenges that loom across the globe. With those in mind, I am also pleased to say that this bill requires the Navy to maintain 12 aircraft carriers. It also authorizes them to buy five more ships, but it does so in a way that will limit the rampant cost growth in the acquisition process.

Those are just a few examples of the good work in this bill. I commend all of the Chairmen and Ranking members of the Armed Services' subcommittees for the excellent work they have done on this conference report and throughout the year.

Finally, I'd like to address an issue to which much attention has been paid, and rightly so—the question of the treatment of detainees. These critical matters suffered the most from the lack of meaningful process and debate.

I am extremely pleased that Senator McCain's amendment involving the prohibition on torture and uniform standards for interrogating detainees has passed. This is a wonderful step to help us regain our rightful place on the summit of the moral high ground.

However, I am concerned that Senator McCain's language could be undercut by the Graham-Levin Amendment. This amendment was negotiated largely in a closed process by the White House and a select few Majority members. It addresses many aspects of the Combatant Status Review Tribunals and military commissions in Guantanamo Bay but there are serious questions about the procedures and they are currently being challenged in federal court. There are also questions about the Amendment's impact on our judicial system and law that's been in existence since the founding of our nation. I expect the courts will have a real challenge interpreting the Amendment's meaning. At the very least—the Graham-Levin Amendment should not apply retroactively or to any pending cases.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, this is not a perfect bill, but it does great things for our troops. I again congratulate Chairman Hunter and urge its adoption.

For the past two days, the future of the Defense Authorization bill has been held hostage for an unrelated and controversial piece of legislation that had no connection to defense. My colleagues and I expressed our deep concern with this, and I am truly pleased to see this bill in its original form come before the House tonight.

In a time of war, it is essential that we provide our men and women in uniform with the resources and equipment they need to succeed, and I am pleased that the leadership of this House finally relented and allowed us to do that. Legislation for our men and women in uniform should never be put in jeopardy for political reasons.

This legislation provides for the initiation and continuation of many important policies that will benefit our servicemen and women, as well as their families upon its final passage. This is a wonderful way to honor them during the holiday season for all they have done throughout the year.

I am extremely pleased with this bill, and commend all of my colleagues who have worked so hard for its passage.

This statement addresses the provisions regarding the treatment of detainees that were under consideration for inclusion in the FY 06 Defense Authorization Conference Report (referred to as the McCain amendment and Graham-Levin amendment provisions, and sections 1401–1406).

First, I am deeply troubled by the lack of open and meaningful process and debate in the House and Senate on these complex and critical matters that affect our troops and intelligence officers—and our national security. There are real differences of opinion on these matters—and they should have been given the fullest debate and vetting because of their implications. Yet, they have been negotiated largely behind closed doors by the White House and a select few majority Members of Congress.

With respect to the Graham-Levin amendment provisions (section 1405) and other detainee provisions (particularly section 1404), there are many unanswered questions and serious concerns about the impact of the provisions on our judicial system and law that has been in existence since the founding of our Nation—and the final negotiated Conference Report language lacks clarity—leaving much open to interpretation.

I expect the courts will have a real challenge interpreting the meaning of these provisions. I also fear that the provisions do not provide our troops and intelligence officers with the clear guidance and protection they need in combating the war on terror.

In addition, I am concerned about the potential for the provisions to significantly undercut the effectiveness of the McCain amendment (sections 1402 and 1403)—an amendment that would help us regain our standing and leadership on moral issues; obtain reliable intelligence, which is not obtained when torture is employed; and protect our troops and intelligence officers, by setting the standard of treatment by which we expect them to be similarly treated.

Although the main professed intent for the Graham-Levin amendment provisions and other detainee provisions (particularly section 1404) was to limit lawsuits and protect our troops and intelligence officers—I am very concerned about the potential for the provisions to do just the opposite.

Specific concerns with respect to the Graham-Levin amendment provisions include the following:

First, the provisions address many aspects of the Combatant Status Review Tribunals (CSRTs) and military commissions at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba—yet Congress has not authorized these procedures and their legality is currently being challenged in federal court. There are concerns that detainees are not given a hearing before a CSRT within a reasonable period of time; they do not have access to their attorneys or evidence; some have not been released from detention after being cleared of wrongdoing by a CSRT; and there has never been a military commission trial, despite the President's suggestion that, given the events of September 11th, it was necessary to establish these new commissions so people could be tried immediately.

Second, the original Graham-Levin amendment would have prohibited CSRTs from using evidence obtained with undue coercion. However, the final negotiated provisions for the Conference Report leave open the possibility that CSRTs and military commissions could consider coerced evidence. As Senator Levin has pointed out, this cuts against the centuries-old principle of Anglo-American law, enshrined in the 5th Amendment to the Constitution, that no person shall be compelled to be a witness against himself.

Third, it is not clear what recourse a detainee would have if there is a legitimate claim of torture, in part given the limitations on court jurisdiction. While the original Graham-Levin amendment would have eliminated federal court jurisdiction only for habeas corpus actions, the final negotiated Conference Report provisions eliminate "any other action against the United States or its agents relating to any aspect of the detention" at Guantanamo Bay. Further, it is true that the Graham-Levin amendment provisions allow for review of CSRT and military commission decisions by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. However, there must first be a CSRT or military commission decision—and as noted above, there are serious concerns about the process surrounding these decisions. In addition, even after a CSRT or military commission decision, the Graham-Levin amendment provisions limit access to the Court of Appeals and the Court's scope of review—and do not ensure a sufficient factual record.

It is also important to note that we have tried and tested military regulations in place that are excellent, including Army Regulation 190–8. These regulations have effectively governed detention procedures in our past wars—and made it unnecessary to file habeas and other claims or set up tribunals and military commissions, such as those currently operating at Guantanamo Bay. Many have argued, the problem is really that existing military regulations have not been followed. We could have simply passed an Amendment that addresses this problem going forward and left the courts' jurisdiction alone with respect to existing claims. But this was not done and here's where we are.

At least, as Senator Levin has emphasized, the Graham-Levin amendment provisions do not apply to or alter pending habeas cases. The Senate voted to remove language from the original Graham amendment that would have applied the habeas-stripping provision to pending cases, affirming that it did not intend such application. Further, under the Supreme Court's ruling in Lindh v. Murphy, 521 U.S. 320 (1997), the fact that Congress chose not to explicitly apply the habeas-stripping provision to pending cases means that the courts retain jurisdiction to consider these appeals. Finally, the effective date language in the original Graham-Levin amendment, and Senate passed Defense Authorization Bill (S. 1042 section 1092), was retained in the final negotiated language for the Conference Report, thereby adopting the Senate position that the habeas-stripping provision does not strip the courts of jurisdiction in pending cases.

In closing, I emphasize that Congress must exercise diligent oversight on detainee matters going forward. Such matters must be subject to a more open and deliberative process—and handled more thoughtfully and responsibly in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON), the distinguished chairman of the Air, Land Subcommittee.

Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to pay tribute to our distinguished chairman and the distinguished ranking member for such a fantastic job under very difficult circumstances to get this conference report to the floor. This was a very difficult piece of legislation, but the chairman persevered and we are very happy to have the legislation here tonight.

I know our soldiers all around the world are happy that this bill is going to be brought forward because there are so many positive things in it. I have the particular pleasure of serving as the chairman of the Air, Land Subcommittee; and I want to pay tribute to my good friend and ranking member, Mr. ABERCROMBIE from Hawaii, who is not here right now, for the excellent work that he did.

In supporting the global war on terrorism in our area, we have included a number of additional programs, including $450 million for up-armored Humvees, $260 million for other armored tactical vehicles, $450 million for small arms, $250 million for ammunition, $30 million for Stryker combat vehicle combat losses, $180 million for radios, $117 million for blue force tracking, $285 million for night vision devices, $35 million to counter improvised explosive devices, $108 million for countering rockets, artillery, and mortars, $50 million for Hellfire missiles, and $180 million for unmanned aerial vehicles.

Mr. Speaker, these are all critically important platforms for the troops in the ongoing battle against terrorism, as well as the theater of operation.

We have also reinstated the C-130J multiyear procurement. We have put some language on the future combat systems budget. We reduced it by $50 million to make sure we are giving the taxpayers the best possible oversight of the SCS program.

We have also attempted to put some more accountability in the DOD acquisition programs and significant language in other provisions that we think are going to provide the taxpayers and the warfighter with more accountability and more efficiency.

Mr. Speaker, I want to pay particular thanks to the leadership, both Mr. SKELTON and Mr. HUNTER, for including two very important commissions that we worked hard to achieve, the Nuclear Strategy Forum and the EMP Commission. I want to pay particular thanks to Mr. ROSCOE BARTLETT, Chairman BARTLETT, for his outstanding work on this issue. The EMP Commission now will have an ongoing process of evaluating our military platforms against the threat of an EMP.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, this process has been long. I think this is the latest we have ever gone with the Defense authorization bill, and the credit for all of this outstanding work goes to my distinguished chairman. He is a great American. The one thing about Mr. HUNTER and the one thing about Mr. SKELTON, everything that we do, they keep in mind the warfighter, the soldier. Each of them has made trip after trip into the theater, into Iraq, into Afghanistan, meeting the troops and making sure that we are in fact holding the Defense Department accountable to giving our troops the best possible equipment and technology.

I am happy to support this conference report. I would ask all of our colleagues to give an overwhelming vote of support for this. Again I want to thank the distinguished chairman and ranking member for their leadership.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ORTIZ).

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak today in support of the Readiness Subcommittee portions of the defense authorization bill. This bill represents a lot of hard work and bipartisan work on the part of the members of this committee. This bill provides nearly $126 billion to the Department of Defense for the operation and maintenance, the needs of our military, and over $12 billion for military construction. In addition, the authorization contains some important policy direction for the Department of Defense. One of the important provisions of the bill would protect the interest of civilian workers in the Department of Defense during public-private competition, another that extends the reimbursement of equipment purchased by soldiers with their own money, and still another will eliminate some of the restrictions that keep our wounded servicemembers from receiving gifts and support from Americans who want to help these soldiers.

I am pleased with these outcomes but I am very disappointed with how the conference on this bill was conducted. The majority leadership's delay on appointing conferees for this bill until after the conference report was completed is really shameful. This was not a conference. Only a few Members had a hand in the deliberations and other Members who have an interest in this bill were shut out of this process. I sincerely hope that this will not be the norm for conferencing future defense bills. Our national defense deserves a more careful, inclusive and deliberative approach.

The war in Iraq and the global war on terror are creating many challenges for the readiness of our Armed Forces. The services have many pressing needs in every area covered by the Readiness Subcommittee. It is impossible to fully address those needs, Mr. Speaker, but this report reflects a balance of many competing demands to ensure that our troops are equipped and ready to defend our Nation. I appreciate that the Members on both sides of the aisle were able to put this bill together and bring it to the floor this early in the morning.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield for a unanimous consent request to the distinguished gentleman from Alabama (Mr. EVERETT), who has done such a great job as chairman of the Strategic Subcommittee.

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the chairman for the job that he has done and the ranking member for the job he has done.

Mr. Speaker, I want to start by recognizing the gentleman from California, our Chairman, an old-time friend of mine and I think probably the most patient chairman I have ever served with in my years in Congress. His skill in leading this committee has been outstanding.

And we also have the contributions of the gentleman from Missouri. Someone I admire very much and who has good memories of the town I was born in and now live—Dothan, AL.

I rise in support of the conference report to accompany the fiscal year 2006 National Defense Authorization Act (H.R. 1815). This legislation supports the administration's objective while making significant improvements to the budget request. Moreover, our national security investment must continue the development of transformational capabilities of future systems, and this conference report meets that goal.

In the area of military space, the Department of Defense has embraced the benefits space provides to our warfighter. Unfortunately, the DOD has experienced significant acquisition problems on several high-priority programs. I look forward to working with the DOD to correct areas of concern and ensure their success for the future.

Within the atomic energy defense activities of the Department of Energy, the bill funds the National Nuclear Security Administration at $9.2 billion. The conference report includes legislation establishing the objectives of the Reliable Replacement Warhead program, a program that enjoys bipartisan support to ensure our nuclear stockpile remains reliable, safe and secure.

The Conferees have funded defense environmental cleanup activities at $6.2 billion.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not recognize my Ranking Member, the gentleman from Texas for his contribution, and the remainder of my subcommittee Members on both sides of the aisle, and their staff. I think we faced some of the most difficult policy decisions in the House Armed Services Committee and I want to express my appreciation for their hard work in protecting this Nation's security.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS) for a colloquy.

Mr. DICKS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to engage the chairman of the Armed Services Committee in a colloquy.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that the conference report does not include the language from the House bill precluding procurements from companies that benefit from illegal foreign subsidies. Is that correct?

Mr. HUNTER. That is correct. As the gentleman knows, I have long supported efforts to protect American businesses and workers from illegal trade practices. Unfortunately, the conferees were unable to come to an agreement that would allow us to include this important language in the final conference report.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, for over 30 years various European governments have provided subsidies to the European civil aircraft industry. These subsidies helped the fledgling European aircraft industry get started in a highly competitive world market. Now $30 billion in subsidies later, Europe is the world's largest producer of commercial aircraft. Mr. Chairman, would you agree that the aircraft production industry is one of the areas that is of particular concern with respect to foreign subsidies?

Mr. HUNTER. Absolutely. Foreign governments should not be allowed to underwrite the risk of corporations involved in developing new airframes, especially when it is at the expense of the American worker. I want to assure my friend that the Armed Services Committee will continue its oversight on this issue, that we are going to revisit it next year.

Let me just leave the formal colloquy to say to my friend that my philosophy is that the American worker pays the taxes that fund these enormously expensive programs that manifest in this bill for $441 billion, that projects American power around the world in defense of the free world and provides an umbrella of freedom for hundreds of countries. It is only equitable and fair that the American taxpayer who pays for the defense of the free world should be able to involve themselves in making the very expensive equipment that we utilize. I can assure my friend that I will continue to work with him to make sure that when those great Americans in uniform come home from places like Iraq and Afghanistan they have some jobs in the American aircraft industry making the aircraft that support the projection of American Armed Forces.

I thank the gentleman for letting me edit my colloquy a little bit.

Mr. DICKS. And I thank Chairman HUNTER for sharing his views on this important matter and urge support for this conference report.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. SNYDER).

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I strongly support this national defense authorization bill. But while I support this conference report, I am one of many Members very disappointed with the process by which the defense bill has been brought to the floor. Last Thursday the House leadership approved the conferees to the defense authorization bill nearly 3 weeks after the Senate finished consideration of their version of the bill. This 3-week delay denied Members the opportunity to instruct conferees on issues of great importance to them in the defense bill. Members of the committee, particularly our senior members, should have been afforded greater opportunity to participate in informal panel meetings in order to discuss and debate many of the significant provisions that were in either the House or Senate bill. Instead, the decisions that were made on many of the highly contentious issues in the bill were made by less than a handful of Members. The national security of this country benefits from the input of many, not the narrow perspective of a few. A great democracy at war must do better. We, my colleagues, can do better. Democrat and Republican, we can do better. Veteran and nonveteran, we can do better. Senior Member and new Member, we can do better.

This bill is a good one. It is a bill that should bring our country and this Congress together united in our support for our fine men and women in uniform, their families and our military retirees but the process the past few weeks has divided us, divided us so deeply that until a few hours ago we weren't even sure we would have a defense bill this year. Our troops deserve better.

I hope that beginning in February, the Republican leadership will make a concerted effort to abide by the processes that ensure active and open participation for all Members in future deliberations. Our troops at all times but particularly during a time of war deserve our best democratic deliberations and our united effort. Having made these comments, however, I am aware of the great commitment of Chairman DUNCAN Hunter and Ranking Member Ike Skelton to our troops and to the national security of our country. I thank Chairman HUNTER for his efforts in getting this bill on the floor tonight.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, if you are one of the 2.5 million people who wear the uniform of the United States, you can know that you have got some great people working for you on this Armed Services Committee. I want to thank the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. SNYDER) who just spoke, and also thank and commend a very distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. McHUGH), who works tirelessly to serve our people in uniform as well as they serve this country, the chairman of the Personnel Subcommittee.

Mr. McHUGH. I thank the distinguished chairman for his kind comments and for the opportunity to speak.

Mr. Speaker, I have a full statement that without objection I would like to enter into the RECORD in its entirety and just make a few brief comments if I might.

The hour is late. Fortunately it is not too late. I listened very carefully to the comments of the gentleman from Arkansas. I think we could all pick any part of any process by which any bill comes to the floor of this House and have objections. I understand his perspective but I was heartened to hear him say he strongly supports this bill, as he should. Because the bottom line, the most important question is, what is the quality of this legislation. The gentleman from Arkansas seems to think it is very good. I agree with him. I can in fact state without hesitation that in my 13 years of having the honor of serving on this committee, this is the best personnel provision package I have seen. If we look at the components of it, a 3.1 percent pay raise, the seventh year in row we have raised pay, reducing the gap between the private sector and our hardworking men and women in uniform, an increase in the hardship duty pay, a doubling in the assignment incentive pay. We require that the government pay for the servicemembers' group life insurance when people are deployed into theaters like Operation Iraqi Freedom and the OEF theater. We double the enlistment bonuses. We add by $30,000 to the reenlistment bonuses. On and on and on. We provide for an accelerated enhancement for concurrent receipt payments for 100 percent of disabled veterans. We provide a program for the first time that ensures that every member of the Guard and Reserve has access to some form of TRICARE, of the military health care program. Benefit after benefit. It is important that we have a broad range of military programs, the best equipment, the most modern technology, but at the end of the day as in the beginning of the day, the key to the success of the American military are the men and women that put that uniform on and today as we speak are serving so bravely. This is a terrific bill for them.

I want to thank the chairman for his great leadership and I certainly urge all the Members of the House to strongly support it. It is the right thing to do for some absolutely amazing people.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report on H.R. 1815, the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2006.

The military personnel provisions of H.R. 1815 address many problems and issues that the men and women in uniform have brought to us. Additionally, the conference report will help to relieve the tremendous pressure being placed on the military services—active, guard, and reserve. To those ends, H.R. 1815 contains these key initiatives:

A military pay raise of 3.1 percent. The raise is 0.5 percent above private sector raises and reduces the pay gap to 4.6 percent from 13.5 percent in fiscal year 1999 culminating seven years of enhanced pay raises.

We recommend continued growth in Army and Marine Corps end strength. Under the conference agreement, the Army would increase by 10,000 and the Marine Corps by 1,000, bringing the Army end strength to 512,400 and the Marine Corps to 179,000.

This bill also provides recruiting, retention and pay initiatives that would, for active component recruiting and retention:

Increase the maximum active duty enlistment bonus maximum from $20,000 to $40,000.

Increase the maximum active duty reenlistment bonus from $60,000 to $90,000.

Provide the Army with unprecedented flexibility to initiate new recruiting incentive programs following 45 days, notice to Congress.

Authorize the Army—active duty reserve, and National Guard—to pay $1,000 to servicemembers who refer recruit candidates for enlistment and those candidates complete technical training.

Increase the maximum enlistment age from 35 years of age to 42.

For the Reserve Components, the conference agreement would:

Authorize the same basic allowance for housing as active duty members when mobilized for periods greater than 30 days.

Authorize a critical skills retention bonus under the active duty program up to a maximum of $100,000 over the course of a career.

The conference report also provides for an expanded death gratuity of $100,000 for all military deaths—not just combat-related deaths—and two retroactive payments:

$100,000 for all military deaths that occurred on or after October 7, 2001; and

$150,000 to survivors of all military deaths, not just combat-related deaths, to compensate for the increase in Servicemembers' Group Life Insurance coverage from $250,000 to $400,000 that became effective for all military members on May 11, 2005.

For wounded servicemembers, the conference agreement would provide a special pay of $430 per month while the servicemember is in rehabilitation. In addition, family members would be provided greater travel and transportation allowances to visit wounded and injured servicemembers.

The conference agreement expands eligibility for TRICARE to all members of the reserve components, and their families, who continue service in the Selected Reserve. Under the agreement, there would be three eligibility categories:

Involuntarily mobilized reservists—as in current law: 1 year TRICARE eligibility for every 90 days of mobilized service.

Persons without employer provided health care, unemployed, self-employed, and

Any person not meeting the above criteria.

This conference agreement also provides enhancements to military justice that would:

Establish the offense of stalking, and

Clearly define the offense of rape, sexual assault and other sexual misconduct in title 10, United States Code, and pattern the elements of the offenses after the Federal statute.

All in all, the conference report on H.R. 1815 is a significant package of legislation directed at providing maximum assistance to the men and women who are fighting the Global War on Terrorism. I urge all my colleagues to vote "yes" on the conference report.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. MARSHALL).

Mr. MARSHALL. I rise today for the purpose of engaging the gentleman from California (Mr. HUNTER) in a colloquy.

Mr. HUNTER. I would be happy to join with my colleague from Georgia in a colloquy.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, the portions of this bill governing the treatment of detainees can serve as a welcome clarification for the rest of the world that America condemns torture in the strongest terms. These changes should help the world to see that America respects freedom when it fights for freedom. I would appreciate the chairman's thoughts on this.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARSHALL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I agree that the language contained in the conference report can both be flexible enough to allow our personnel to protect America's security interests and fair enough to protect our personnel without placing themselves in legal jeopardy when they employ the means any reasonable person would in a given interrogation.

If I might depart from the colloquy just for a bit to explain to my colleagues in the House, the Senate injected the straight Senate detainee language about humane treatment and the House injected and insisted on a section called personnel protections which gave defenses to uniform and nonuniformed personnel in detainee actions. It also provided for counsel to be employed or provided by the government. That was the essence of the provisions that were injected into the conference on the House side.

I thank the gentleman for letting me expand.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Chairman, is it your understanding that the bill's language referencing the Senate's 1994 reservation to the United Nations' Convention Against Torture is intended to prohibit conduct that shocks the conscience, the standard adopted by the United States Supreme Court in Rochin v. California?

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARSHALL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. That is my understanding.

Mr. MARSHALL. And, Mr. Chairman, is it also your understanding that the bill does not extend constitutional rights to noncitizens of the United States?

Mr. HUNTER. That is my understanding.

Mr. MARSHALL. I thank the gentleman for his clarification.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to yield at this time to the gentleman who chairs the Projection Forces Subcommittee, the wonderful gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BARTLETT), who lives on the Monocacy River and spends so much of his time and has spent a lot of time this last year working on the issues of shipbuilding and power projection of maritime forces and he has done a wonderful job.

Mr. BARTLETT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend Chairman HUNTER and Ranking Member SKELTON for completing the impressive task of this conference report in such a short period of time. I also want to thank my subcommittee ranking member, Mr. TAYLOR, for his tireless efforts and dedication to the preparation of this report while simultaneously coordinating Hurricane Katrina relief efforts in Mississippi. The intense work involved in preparing the conference report has been accomplished only with the assistance of our able and hardworking staff and I really want to commend their efforts and the quality of the work they have so diligently done.

Mr. Speaker, this conference agreement provides the men and women in our Armed Forces the tools to effectively project our Nation's power and influence throughout the globe. Initiatives within this bill to build the Navy of the future, authorize advance procurement funding for the Navy's next generation platforms while continuing development and buildout of the Littoral Combat Ship and Virginia Class attack submarine fleet.

I am also pleased that this conference report takes steps to improve our U.S. shipbuilding industry to make it more efficient and commercially competitive in the future. Only by applying downward pressure on shipbuilding costs will we be able to afford a fleet of sufficient size to meet the national security needs and global commitments of tomorrow.

This agreement authorizes multiyear contract authority for additional C–17 aircraft if procurement is consistent with the results of the Quadrennial Defense Review. Furthermore, we encourage the Secretary of the Air Force to evaluate options for maintaining C–17 production capability until results of the C–5 modernization programs are available.

This conference agreement is an important milestone in making our country more secure. The National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2006 is critical in meeting the challenges and demands placed upon our Armed Services today, supplying a foundation on which to build well into the future. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting our soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines by voting for the Fiscal Year 2006 National Defense Authorization Act.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. TAYLOR).

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, let me first start by thanking my good friend Roscoe Bartlett for his tremendous help this year. The bill authorizes five ships, more than the administration asked for, unfortunately not as many as I would like to build, but very, very great help of the gentleman from Maryland on the part of adding an LHA(R) for the Marine Corps to the ship; getting the next generation destroyer, the DDX, started; and adding a Virginia Class submarine to the fleet.

Again at five ships, if you figure the typical 30-year life of a ship, we are cruising toward a 150-ship Navy. That is entirely too small, despite Navy projections that they think they can get the fleet up to about 313 by 2013. But again these are important steps in the right direction.

I want to commend the gentleman from Maryland for his help in making that happen. There are a lot of people who have a lot of things they want to say.

I want to yield what remains of my time to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. MARSHALL).

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I would simply add to what my friend from Mississippi has said and others have said that this bill is the culmination of months of work by the committee in a bipartisan way to give the men and women that we have in uniform, particularly those men and women in harm's way what we believe they need in order to carry on their duty on behalf of the United States. I think everybody on the committee agrees with me that everything that we can possibly do to support them we are going to do. I want to compliment the chairman, the ranking member, and other members of the committee for a job well done.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA), the distinguished chairman of the Intelligence Committee.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report, although I am concerned about provisions of the bill that have the potential to create a chilling effect that would harm the ability of the intelligence community to gather vital information to protect our country. I want to first thank Chairman HUNTER for his outstanding personal efforts to safeguard our Nation's intelligence capabilities and our intelligence personnel.

☐ 0030

I appreciate his close coordination with me and with the Intelligence Committee during the negotiations on this bill.

Let me be crystal clear: The United States does not engage in torture, and the United States abides by its treaty obligations with respect to cruel, inhuman, and degrading treatment. The principles of the conference report relating to cruel and inhuman and degrading treatment should not be controversial or even remarkable. As the President said earlier this week, we should make it clear to the world that we do not engage in torture.

But I want to record my substantial discomfort that this bill could be read more broadly than intended and have a detrimental effect on our national security. After the 9/11 attacks, we learned the hard way that excessive restrictions on our intelligence agencies such as the Deutch Doctrine and the "wall" between intelligence and law enforcement often had a chilling effect on operations that was far broader than intended and significantly hurt our intelligence gathering capabilities. I want to reinforce Chairman HUNTER's efforts to make very clear that this conference report does not create new criminal liabilities and does not create any private right of action with respect to interrogation practices. It also does not modify the substantive definition of cruel, inhuman, and degrading treatment that applies to the United States under its existing treaty obligations.

Despite those concerns I fully support this agreement because of the provisions of this bill. Mr. Speaker, I believe that Chairman HUNTER's efforts has significantly improved this legislation, clarified its intent; so I will vote for the conference report and I encourage my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT).

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, we have handled, the conference has handled, leadership has handled, and the staff, a record number of amendments in a record period of time. And while I have some problems with the process, I commend them for the end result. It is a good piece of work.

There are many good features to it. We retained intact the McCain language which prohibits the United States from engaging in torture of prisoners. There are a number of very fine personnel improvements here which our service personnel dearly deserve.

We have given the impetus to start up something called a caps reliable replacement warhead program but at the same time put it within reasonable and restrictive bounds, which I think is smart. And I could go on and on. There are some good features to this bill.

I am not criticizing anyone in particular when I say that I find fault with the process, but I have been on this committee for 23 years, all the time I have served here. And, unfortunately, given the time restraints, which were largely the result of the fact that the Senate put us on abbreviated schedule, they were late getting their bill done, we have had to do this with much too much haste.

Here is the bill right here that we are about to consider, and we only saw it really in final form on Friday afternoon. We were appointed at one hour, and at the very next hour we were meeting for our first and only formal meeting. I hope this will not become a precedent for the process in the future, and that is why I express this concern now. The bill itself I support.

I am also very concerned about what is happening to the defense appropriations bill, and I do not want to see it happen to our defense authorization bill. We do not want our bill to become a must-pass piece of legislation to which other bills, other wholly unrelated legislation, gets attached because ours is must-pass legislation, a moving vehicle. That could have happened to this very bill, and it is the reason we are standing here at 12:30 at night instead of dealing with it yesterday afternoon with much more leisure than we are giving to the bill right now because it was almost hijacked by something totally extraneous. And I would say to the chairman I am glad that this did not happen, glad that we have got a clean bill, and glad that we can vote on it without having these extraneous matters to consider and weigh.

Once again, congratulations on a job well done.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH).

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, in the last few minutes, I have gone through a few hundred pages of this bill, which I think it is instructive to know that $1 billion for a so-called Iraqi Freedom Fund is being authorized. We do not know what that is. There is $2.5 billion for classified ops in Iraq. We do not know what that is, certainly.

On the issue of alleged clandestine detention facilities for individuals captured in the global war on terrorism, here is what it says: "Conferees determined the amendment was outside the jurisdiction of the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives. So we still do not know whether or not this House has any authority to rein in the administration's rendition policies.

I would ask the gentleman from California a question. I have just read a couple hundred pages. I have not seen the whole bill. Could the gentleman tell me if there is a provision in this bill that permits drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge?

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. No. As the gentleman knows, the ANWR position is not in this bill.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, could the gentleman explain what the Iraqi Freedom Fund is about?

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will continue to yield, the Iraqi Freedom Fund is a fund that includes money for body armor and lots of other equipment. It is a fund that we supply each year. It is a revolving fund that we keep money in so that the warfighting commanders can buy what they need immediately when they need it.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's explanation.

Could the gentleman clarify this report language on page 210 that says that the amendment was outside the jurisdiction of the Committees on Armed Services in the Senate and the House with respect to alleged clandestine detention facilities?

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would further yield, let me just say to the gentleman that is a classified portion that is within the jurisdiction of the Intelligence Committee.

Mr. KUCINICH. So it is not covered in this report is what he is saying?

Mr. HUNTER. That is correct.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. FRANK).

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, in the combination of institutional incompetence and ideological extremism that has us contemplating this bill at this hour with further important legislation to go, all kinds of stuff gets put in and the regular process gets degraded.

I just want to call attention to one wholly irrelevant provision, irrelevant to the defense. The Boy Scouts of America have been found by States and cities to be violating their anti-discrimination policies with regard to both sexual orientation and religion, and some cities have said that they do not want anyone who fails to follow their State or city's policy getting free facilities. That I suppose can be debated or not as to whether it is right or wrong, but it does not seem to me that there is any argument for having it in the Armed Services authorization bill in a Congress run by supposed States rights conservatives, a provision that says to every city in America you will let the Boy Scouts use your facilities for free whether or not you think they violate the law against discrimination based on religion or sexual orientation.

Now, that is probably going to be found unconstitutional, but I find that to be way beyond the scope of this bill and an example of the degradation of the legislative process that it is in here.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR).

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, for all the meritorious provisions of this bill dealing with national defense, there is one that has nothing to do with national defense, and that is the provision on Peotone Airport, Illinois. The language would make it a requirement of Federal law that the governing body of South Suburban Airport in Will County, Peotone Airport, Illinois, be comprised of a majority of local residents of the county.

There was an effort to stick this language in our surface transportation, SAFETEA-LU, last summer. I vigorously objected. It has nothing to do with surface transportation. It has nothing to do with the substance of that bill. So now here it reappears. And this is a total contradiction to the often professed Republican stance that the Federal Government should not tell local governments how to run their business. It is an unprecedented change in the longstanding policy of the Department of Transportation and the FAA that State and local governments determine the structure of airport organization and management and the Federal Government regulates airport safety. This is objectionable.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to the provision on Peotone Airport, which was inserted into this conference report at the last minute. The amendment would make it a federal requirement that the governing body of the South Suburban (Peotone) airport in Will County, Illinois be comprised of a majority of local residents of the county.

Insertion of this provision in the Conference Report is but the latest example of the abuse of the conference process to enact a legislative provision, which couldn't be passed on its merits, as a separate bill. The provision was never considered by the Committee of jurisdiction, the Transportation and Infrastructure Committee. Last summer, there was an unsuccessful, last minute effort to add this provision to the Transportation bill, SAFETEA–LU. Now the provision appears again in a Conference Report that has nothing to do with aviation, or transportation. The provision was not in either of the defense bills that went to conference. It is now protected against points of order. Regrettably, this type of abuse of the process seems to happen every time a major conference report comes before the House.

In addition to the abuse of process, the provision is bad policy. It is an unprecedented change in the longstanding policy that state and local governments determine the structure of airport organization and management, while the federal government regulates airport safety. The FAA is a safety organization, and its highest priority is to ensure the safe and efficient operation of the airport and airway system, not to arbitrate disputes between local authorities. The State of Illinois should determine what body will govern and develop the Peotone airport and how that body should be structured.

Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret that the conference process has been abused to pass this undesirable provision.

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

SEC. 1063. AIRPORT CERTIFICATION.

For the airport referred to in paragraph (1) to be eligible to receive approval of an airport layout plan by the Federal Aviation Administration, such airport shall ensure and provide documentation that—

(1) the governing body of an airport built after the date of enactment of this Act at site number 04506.3*A and under number 17-0027 of the National Plan of Integrated Airport Systems is composed of a majority of local residents who live in the county in which such airport is located; and

(2) the airport complies with sections 303, 303A, and 303B of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (41 U.S.C. 253–253b) as implemented by the Federal Acquisition Regulation issued pursuant to section 25 of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 421) regarding land procurement and developer selection.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding me this time.

I rise in support of the conference report, and I express my appreciation that this report affirms the principle that a great power should not need to resort to inhuman tactics to pursue its objectives. The anti-torture language that is in this conference report is entirely appropriate.

I also appreciate the fact that it strikes the proper balance between an affirmation of our principles and an understanding that our intelligence agents must act with discretion and flexibility when dealing with the very difficult job that we have given them. This is an important affirmation that strengthens our country, that improves our intelligence, and makes us safer.

I commend the chairman, the ranking member for making sure the provision is in here. I would urge a "yes" vote on the conference report.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER).

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the Graham-Levin amendment language contained in this bill. This provision restricts the jurisdiction of the Federal courts to consider habeas corpus petitions from detainees at Guantanamo or complaints about their treatment. It also would require military tribunals to "weigh the value of the intelligence gained from an interrogation against a judgment on whether the statement was coerced."

In other words, even if the bill says they cannot torture, it also says they can use the information they obtain by torturing people if the military tribunal concludes the statement itself was not coerced.

These two provisions taken together, Mr. Speaker, make the anti-torture provision of this bill unenforceable. They cannot complain about it through habeas corpus. They cannot get into the Federal courts to complain about it, and the military tribunal can use the coerced evidence.

That is not right. This is un-American, and this language ought to have been stricken from the bill.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOOZMAN). The Chair will remind Members to refrain from wearing communicative badges while under recognition.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the ranking member very much for his leadership and the chairman.

As we all know, all of us have constituents in the U.S. military. Texas has some of the largest numbers of military in the United States, living in Texas.

I rise to compliment some of the aspects of this bill, such as the increase in the death gratuity and the TRICARE increase for the military and their families. I see the impact on my constituents for improved health care. I also applaud the avian flu provision and as well the issue dealing with the Department of Energy that will not allowed the DOE to increase our nuclear warheads but will only allow the DOE to study the effectiveness of existing warheads.

Finally the conferees agreed that our that our values do not support torture practices, however, I am certainly disappointed that the habeas has been taken away from so called enemy combatants. And I might also add that here we go again with "Star Wars," and program doubtful in value.

But it is important that the Goode amendment was not included. We do not need to use the military at the border. We are a country of laws as we are a country of immigrants. And I might say as well that the 527 campaign reform legislation belongs somewhere else, not in the Defense bill.

Our soldiers need the funding resources. They need our help. They need an increase in compensation. They need better health care. And their families, tragically, when they die in the line of duty, the least we can do is to provide their dependents with a decent, livable opportunity to survive.

I hope that we will have a better process the next time, but I say on behalf of my constituents that I hope we will move this legislation forward.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Just one or two points, Mr. Speaker. Again in the detainee legislation, the House inserted protections for American uniform personnel and nonuniform personnel.

The other point that was mentioned by the gentleman from New York was on probative value of evidence that might have been obtained under coercion. We all know that we have an exclusionary rule in this country domestically, and that means, as in Davis v. Mississippi, which is one of the threshold cases, the fact that the person did have his fingerprints on the threshold of the grandmother that he murdered, was picked out of an unconstitutionally developed lineup; and therefore we said, as a matter of disciplining our process, we would let people go even though we knew they had committed the crime.

This is a different situation, Mr. Speaker. This is a situation where a person may have been interrogated and may have disclosed, for example, a cache of weapons with which he was going to use to destroy American soldiers on the battlefield, the idea that in our review when we determine whether we are going to free him and send him back, having seen some of the people that we freed at Guantanamo show back up on the battlefield intent on killing American soldiers, that we felt we could not go that far. We could still take the probative value, and if that interrogation developed that cache of weapons, we would look at the cache of weapons and say the person who maintained that was in fact a combatant and it is not fair to our soldiers to put him back where he can shoot at them again.

Mr. Speaker, let me just say one last thing before my great colleague winds up on his side. The gentleman from Missouri (Mr. SKELTON) is our champion on the Armed Services Committee for military education. That is an area in which he has more expertise than anybody else in this body. And I thought, as we move toward the conclusion of this bill, that it was only appropriate that as a gentleman who knows more history than the rest of us, and, in fact, I went over a book that we were going to get him and I found out he was already reading that book. I wanted to dedicate to him and to give to him a book from the committee signed by all the members of the committee, and the ones that have not come to the floor yet will have their opportunity. It is the "Battle of Vicksburg." And for a gentleman who knows every battle that was fought in America and knows it very well, I thought that this would be an interesting tribute to us for a gentleman who really guides us, Democrats and Republicans, in this very important area of military education.

□ 0045

So to the great gentleman from Missouri (Mr. SKELTON), I hope you have good reading, and let me know the high points.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, the chairman, Chairman HUNTER, flatters me. It is rather interesting, and it is important for me to point out that my late wife, Susie Skelton, went to All Saints High School, which is in the middle of the Vicksburg, Mississippi battlefield. And because of that, that has special meaning to our family and, Mr. Speaker, I am most appreciative.

This is an excellent bill. It includes language regarding detainees, pay raises, and medical help. I hope that this does not set a pattern on process. I realize that there was a time problem with the Senate passing the bill so late, and with the Thanksgiving recess coming up. But I hope that the panels will be able to meet fully, explore each of the issues, and as we are not able to do that as nearly as fully as we should, we had to rely on our wonderful staff, and they did an outstanding job.

Toward the last, Mr. Speaker, this was a rather torturous procedural effort. We jumped two major hurdles toward the end; and at the end of the day, the bill is an excellent one for those in uniform and for those who defend our country.

So with that I thank all of the members of the committee. Chairman HUNTER, thank you especially for your help, your leadership, and to each member on our committee for the tremendous work that they did. Hours and days went into this. And a special thanks, Mr. Chairman, for this book on Vicksburg.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SKELTON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to thank the gentleman. I thought it would be appropriate for us also to thank this wonderful staff, this great bipartisan staff who put this product together. Let us thank them for what they did.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HUNTER. How much time do we have left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOOZMAN). The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for 1 additional minute so the gentleman from Georgia could make a presentation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that very much. It was when Chairman HUNTER provided the book to Ike about Vicksburg that I thought that perhaps it was appropriate here publicly to say that there is probably no person on the Armed Services Committee today, nor perhaps no person in the history of the Armed Services Committee, who has done so much for military education. Ike Skelton has constantly talked about the need to provide education and training for our men and women in uniform, and he is known throughout the armed services for that great contribution that he has made.

A couple of years ago, he came up with the idea of commissioning a scholarship program for the graduates of 2-year military colleges to continue their education, with DOD paying for it if DOD thinks that it is appropriate to do so; scholarships for these graduates as newly commissioned officers to finish their college educations. This year, unbeknownst to Ike, that scholarship program was named the Ike Skelton Early Commissioning Program Scholarship.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to present Senator ISAKSON's, a Member of the other body, his bill originally signed by him naming that program the Ike Skelton Early Commissioning Program Scholarship.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for an additional 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I am indeed flattered, and I do thank the gentleman from Georgia for this unexpected tribute, and a special thanks to Senator ISAKSON, the fellow Georgian, for his efforts in this. I am indeed flattered, and I will do my best to merit the confidence both of the chairman for his presentation and the presentation Mr. MARSHALL made, and with deep appreciation.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bill, but not without great reservation. Despite my concerns, I am pleased to see that the bill really provides good provisions for our troops and their families. Moving into the specifics of the bill, H.R. 1815 authorizes $441.5 billion for defense programs in FY 2006, slightly less than the President's request. The total is $20.9 billion (5%) more than the current regular authorized and appropriated level not counting $75.9 billion in FY 2005 emergency supplemental defense funds appropriated last month for operations in Iraq. Among other things, the bill increases the death gratuity for all active and activated service members to $100,000 retroactive to October 7, 2001. This authority is needed to pay the higher death gratuity to all service members, and more importantly pay it retroactively to those what do not qualify under the combat-related requirements since October 7, 2001. Furthermore, for the first time ever, all reservists who agree to continue service in the Selected Reserves will have an opportunity, depending on their status, to buy into a government subsidized TRICARE Standard health care program for themselves and their families. This authority is needed to allow expansion of the program to all drilling Selected Reservists, and enhances the current TRICARE Reserve Select program.

In addition, H.R. 1815 authorizes the President's request of an across-the-board 3.1% pay increase for military personnel. Further, the measure authorizes targeted increases for mid-grade and senior non-commissioned officers and mid-grade officers. The raises would reduce the pay gap between the military and private sector to 4.6%, from 5.1%. Even more important, the measure increases payments to survivors of deceased military personnel to $100,000, from $12,000, and eliminates the requirement that these families have to deduct those payments from the total they can receive from a similar program at the Veterans Affairs Department. The bill also report increases the bonuses for enlistment and reenlistment and raises the eligible enlistment age to 42. These authorities are needed by the Department and most will expire on December 31, 2005.

From a health care prospective, for the first time ever, all reservists who agree to continue service in the Selected Reserves will have an opportunity, depending on their status, to buy into a government subsidized TRICARE Standard health care program for themselves and their families. This authority is needed to allow expansion of the program to all drilling Selected Reservists, and enhances the current TRICARE Reserve Select program. H.R. 1815 also extends TRICARE coverage for children of service members killed in the line of duty until 21 years of age, or 23 years, if a full-time student.

Under the bill the Department of Defense is required to report back on its plans to respond to an international and/or domestic outbreak of avian flu. This is very important as our nation combats the potential outbreak of this flu. Lastly Requires the establishment of a Mental Health Task Force that will look at how the Department and the Services can better identify, treat, and support the mental health needs, including Post Traumatic Stress Disorder, for service members and their families. An effort to provide a comprehensive examination of the mental health programs and policies of the Department of Defense and other federal programs, this effort will not be initiated without a defense authorization bill.

Title 3 of the bill allows the Department of Defense to accept gifts on behalf of wounded service members, Department of Defense civilians or their families. Soldiers are currently restricted from accepting more than $20 in gifts. This makes it impossible for well meaning people to give gifts to wounded troops or their families without violating ethics laws. The provision will only partially fix the issue as people will not be able to give gifts directly to the soldier. The bill recognizes the diversity of members of the Armed Forces who serve and died in Operation Iraqi Freedom and Operation Enduring Freedom. Additionally, the bill authorizes $30 million for Department of Defense Impact Aid. These are funds provided to states that have military bases in communities and these bases are feeding of the economy of the community.

Before closing, let me take a few moments to express my concerns with the bill. In terms of "Star Wars" I would only say, here we go again providing for additional testing on unproven technology that will not ensure our safety. Finally I am disappointed that the bill provides limited judicial review of appeals from prisoners seeking determinations of enemy combatant status. This does nothing but closes the court doors which going against the principle of judicial review and due process.

Mr. WATT. Mr. Speaker, I support the extension of the Defense Department's 1207 program, which ensures that the Department's federal contracting process in no way supports or subsidizes the discrimination that has long existed in the contracting business. The extension of the program through September 2009 is needed to help achieve that goal.

Overwhelming evidence has shown that minorities historically have been excluded from both public and private construction projects, particularly from defense contracts. Since its adoption in 1986, the Department of Defense's 1207 program has helped level the playing field for minority contractors, but there is still much work yet to be done.

A 2004 North Carolina study by MGT America, an independent research and consulting firm, revealed that North Carolina continues to underutilize businesses owned by minorities or women in nearly all categories of transportation contracts. More specifically, African American and Hispanic businesses are underutilized in every business category of contracts awarded by the North Carolina Department of Transportation. In an earlier Charlotte study, Hispanic contractors reported that they are treated differently and experience more pressure to get the work done. Clearly, efforts to encourage minority participation in government contracting are still necessary.

The Department of Defense's 1207 program helps to counter discrimination without imposing an undue burden on white-owned businesses. Small businesses owned by white contractors are eligible to receive the benefits of the program if they are socially and economically disadvantaged.

I strongly support the reauthorization of the Department of Defense's 1207 program.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to address the defense authorization bill conference report for fiscal year 2006. The bill includes language regarding U.S. policy concerning the war in Iraq, which reflects substantially House Joint Resolution 55 of which I am a prime cosponsor, with regard to phased redeployment of U.S. forces in Iraq during calendar year 2006. There is also language in this bill that clearly lays out how detainees in the custody of the U.S. Government will be treated. However, it does not address the question of the outsourcing torture or contracting with third parties for interrogation and detention not subject to the provisions of this bill. We will pay a heavy price in terms of world condemnation for this deliberate omission when such activities are revealed.

There are several measures to improve the oversight of major acquisition programs for the Department of Defense. Each year the nation gives the Pentagon hundreds of billions of dollars, and each year the Pentagon spends a good portion of that money buying things: ships, planes, tanks, helicopters, and other items. Unfortunately, in recent years almost every single high-profile defense acquisition program has experienced cost overruns, performance shortfalls, or testing problems. I believe that one reason for these problems is that Congress hasn't done everything it could to make sure that these important programs stay on track and that the companies building the systems deliver what they promise to deliver. At the end of the day, this is about getting our troops in the field what they need, when they need it. Making sure this happens is one of Congress' primary Constitutional duties.

I am pleased then that this year, the defense authorization bill puts measures in place that will improve Congress' visibility of several major programs that are facing challenges, including the Future Combat System, the Joint Tactical Radio System, and the new Presidential helicopter. In each case, both myself and my subcommittee chairman Congressman CURT WELDON, are committed to making sure that these programs deliver the capability our military needs at a price we can afford.

I am also encouraged that for the first time, this bill requires the Department of Defense and the military services to report back to us on options for moving to a capital budgeting approach for defense acquisition, which I have advocated. Today, the DOD is one of the few government entities in the United States that continues to cash-finance the purchase of multi-million dollar capital items such as ships and aircraft. As I've pointed out many times during committee discussions, this cash-financing and budgeting system is leading the Department to make poor decisions on major capital acquisition programs. In effect, the way we budget for new equipment is determining what we end up buying. That is a completely backwards system and one that needs to change. The conference report before us today will require the DOD and the Armed Services to take a serious look at using an alternative, modern, and more flexible capital budgeting approach that will help the DOD get our troops the equipment they need to do their jobs.

As I indicated earlier, this bill includes language in Section 1227 on U.S. Policy in Iraq that I think represents bipartisan agreement with House Joint Resolution 55, which I introduced with Congressman WALTER JONES this past June. Joint Resolution 55 called for the President to begin the withdrawal of U.S. troops from Iraq in 2006. Similarly, the bill before us today says that:

"Calendar Year 2006 should be a period of significant transition to full Iraqi sovereignty, with Iraqi forces taking the lead for the security of a free and sovereign Iraq, thereby creating the conditions for the phased redeployment of the United States forces from Iraq."

I think the bipartisan support in Congress for a phased redeployment and the President's eventual signature for this measure should signal a significant step toward getting US troops out of Iraq. I'm pleased that despite the recent White House overheated rhetoric about "total" or "complete" victory and casting aspersions on the patriotism of those opposed to this war that we may finally be at a point where we can all agree that in 2006 US troops will begin to come home from Iraq. If the President signs this bill it follows that support for this language requires beginning the drawdown of US forces in Iraq as soon as possible.

Again, as I indicated earlier, this bill contains language clarifying how individuals detained and held by the United States Government will be treated and interrogated. The language originally sponsored by Senator JOHN MCCAIN that prohibits "cruel, inhumane, or degrading" treatment of prisoners is retained in the conference report in its original form. However, while I'm pleased that this language is included in the bill—after the President threatened to veto this very same language—I am troubled by an issue that this bill does not address.

This issue is the issue of whether or not the United States condones, by default, the torture of prisoners by "outsourcing" interrogations to other nations. The technique of handing over prisoners in our custody to other countries is called "extraordinary rendition," and has been described in numerous press reports. In some cases, it may even be an appropriate way to deal with a prisoner wanted for crimes in their home country.

However, what happens to those prisoners when they leave U.S. custody is not addressed in this bill in any way. As a result, while the bill prohibits people in our direct custody and control from being tortured, it is silent—and thus, complicit—with regard to our handing over prisoners to other nations so that they can be tortured on our behalf.

So, while we have made some progress with regard to making it clear to our military and intelligence services how they are to treat prisoners in our custody, I am concerned that this bill doesn't go far enough. I intend to support this bill today based on what is in it, but I want to make it clear that Congress must, as soon as possible, deal with the issue of the outsourcing of torture. If Congress does not do so soon, there will likely be some kind of incident somewhere involving a prisoner in our care that is handed over to another country and is subsequently tortured, or even killed. When that happens, if Congress has remained silent on this issue the United States will suffer another needless defeat in the court of global public opinion. When that happens, millions around the world may conclude that Congress condones the outsourcing of torture simply because we have chosen not to act to stop it.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the House Armed Services Committee, I rise in support of the conference report to H.R. 1815, and thank Chairman HUNTER and Ranking Member SKELTON for their hard work. Once again the committee has demonstrated its commitment to ensuring the security of our nation and the safety of our men and women in uniform.

I am extremely pleased that we were able to consider this measure without extraneous and controversial provisions that would have endangered its passage. Our troops and the civilian employees in the Department of Defense have performed valiantly and made enormous sacrifices to safeguard the United States, and H.R. 1815 recognizes their commitment by providing much-needed assistance to them and their families. The conference report includes a pay raise of 3.1% for military, increases certain enlistment and re-enlistment bonuses, and allows certain members of the reserves to buy into the TRICARE health care program for themselves and their families. The measure also increases the endstrength of the Army and the Marine Corps, which should help relieve some of the stress on troops who have experienced repeated deployments.

The legislation also contains $50 billion in supplemental funding to provide force protection equipment, such as up-armored Humvees and jammers for improvised explosive devices, to our troops in Iraq and Afghanistan, as well as to replace equipment that has been degraded by the high operations tempo. Though the military has accomplished a great deal with what they have, we have clear indications that we are wearing down our equipment, perhaps faster than we can replace it. The investment in this bill is an important step, but we must not forget that it will take billions more to completely reset and recapitalize our force.

This bill also contains important language to ensure that Department of Defense does not contract out existing government work without realizing actual cost savings. Earlier in the year, I drew the committee's attention to DOD's practice of reorganizing or reclassifying existing government work in order to circumvent required contracting rules without demonstrating savings. The language in this measure closes that loophole and goes much farther by establishing much clearer standards about how DOD can contract out work. I thank the chairman of the Readiness Subcommittee, Mr. HEFLEY, as well as the committee staff, for working with me and my office to address my original concern, and I will continue to work with the committee to monitor the implementation of this new language to ensure that all parties involved are treated fairly and that taxpayer dollars are used as effectively as possible.

Finally, H.R. 1815 demonstrates its interest in maintaining a strong Navy through a continued commitment to the next-generation destroyer, DD(X). It also includes language affirming the committee's support of the VIRGINIA-class submarine and directing the Navy to initiate a program to improve future submarine technology in a cost-effective manner. This provision should be welcome news to Electric Boat, a major employer in my district, which has announced as many 2,400 layoffs in 2006, primarily due to insufficient submarine design and construction work. To prevent our submarine force from shrinking to dangerously low levels, I will continue my efforts to integrate cutting-edge technology into VIRGINIA-class submarines and to increase procurement of these ships to two per year. Given other nations' investments in their navy and undersea capabilities, we cannot afford for the United State to lose its undersea dominance.

Again, I commend the Chairman HUNTER, Ranking Member SKELTON and my colleagues on the committee for a well-balanced bill, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the conference report for H.R. 1815, the Fiscal Year 2006 National Defense Authorization. This legislation is critically important to our troops and our efforts in the global war on terror. In addition, the conference report contains a provision that is extremely important to my constituents in Illinois's 11th Congressional district. The "Weller Amendment", which pertains to Chicago's South Suburban Airport, ensures that the airport is built with local control and through a transparent process.

The South Suburban Airport will be one of Illinois' largest infrastructure projects to be undertaken since the construction of Chicago O'Hare International airport. With the construction of the South Suburban Airport, an estimated 236,000 jobs will be created and it is projected to generate $5.1 billion in economic growth. In addition to the boost it will give the local economy, the South Suburban Airport will further reduce the congestion that currently plagues Chicago O'Hare.

The "Weller amendment" is necessary to protect the taxpayers of Will County who will have the ultimate responsibility for the infrastructure and development associated with the airport. Local responsibility, accountability and control is essential for the airport to be successful. For Will County, where the entire footprint of the airport is located, to have a majority control on how this airport should take shape and operate. It is just common sense.

The first section of my provision will ensure that Will County residents will receive a majority of the seats on the governing board of the airport. Since my days in the Illinois General Assembly, I have been a strong supporter of the Third Airport and have always maintained that local control is vital to the airport governance. It is the residents of Will County who will have to live with both the benefits and the consequences the new growth will bring to the county. They must have a majority of seats on the governing board to represent Will county taxpayer interests.

The second section of my provision applies to current law, requiring that all contractual dealings of the airport follow federal procurement laws. There must be transparency and open bidding in the contracting for this airport. There is no room for sweetheart deals or backdoor no bid contracts which is the practice of the Abraham Lincoln Airport Commission, which is composed of communities in Cook County who seek to control the Will County site. This point has also been reinforced by the recent opinion by Illinois Attorney General Lisa Madigan. In her opinion, issued last Friday evening, the process that the Abraham Lincoln Airport Commission used to pick two airport developers violated state procurement laws.

I also realize that some of my constituents, especially near the airport site, do not support the construction of a suburban third airport. With this understood, should an airport be built, I think they would agree that those that have to live with the airport should control the operation of the airport.

I would like to deeply thank Speaker HASTERT and Chairman HUNTER for their support of this amendment. I would also like to thank Will County Executive Larry Walsh, Will County Board Chairman Jim Moustis, Illinois State Senator Debbie Halvorson and all of the public officials in Will and Kankakee counties for their support.

Ms. LORETTA SANCHEZ of California. Mr. Speaker, let me start by adding my thanks to the Armed Services Committee staff for their hard work and long hours in getting this conference report to the floor.

On the whole, I think this is a solid bill—a bill that does a lot of good for our servicemembers and their families.

It raises basic pay and hardship duty pay. It provides TRICARE coverage for Reservists. It increases the death gratuity for all activated servicemembers. It begins the much-needed reform of the DOD acquisition system.

And with the inclusion of the McCain language, this bill makes a strong statement to the world that the United States does NOT condone—and will not tolerate—the torture or abuse of detainees.

But I'm particularly happy to note that the final conference agreement includes two important revisions to the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ).

The first revision would update Article 120 of the UCMJ making it a modern, complete sexual assault statute that protects victims, empowers commanders and prosecutors, and improves good order and discipline of the armed forces.

It offers military prosecutors a clear definition of sexual assault and better tools for prosecuting sexual offenses, and it affords increased protection for victims by emphasizing acts of the perpetrator rather than the reaction of the victim during an assault.

The second revision to the UCMJ involves the addition of stalking as a specifically defined offense, bringing the UCMJ in line with federal laws and the laws of all 50 states.

The language in this bill will offer commanders and prosecutors a clear definition of stalking. It will raise awareness, strengthen law enforcement, and underscore the criminality of this conduct to all members of the military community.

Furthermore, it will give commanders a powerful tool to cut stalking off in its early stages—before a stalker's behavior escalates.

I have pushed for these changes for a long, long time, and I am thrilled to see both chambers finally agree on these major steps forward for the military justice system and for the men and women of our armed forces.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Speaker, today we are being asked to vote on the Department of Defense Authorization conference report. Once again, the House is being required to vote on a bill in the dead of night, without the opportunity to read the language or consider its ramifications. I am especially concerned about two provisions in this bill—provisions that were not in the original House bill, were not the subject of Congressional hearings, and have not been carefully scrutinized. Yet, those two provisions—one that undermines the fundamental right of habeas corpus and the other that undermines the ban on torture—will have profound implications for our legal traditions and our reputation throughout the world.

The first provision, based on a Senate amendment, would limit U.S. courts' historic habeas corpus jurisdiction to review detentions. This would cut off access to the courts by persons held at Guantánamo Bay.

Habeas corpus is one of the most fundamental precepts of American Constitutional tradition. The court-stripping provision included in this legislation would do grievous harm to the rule that the government cannot just lock up people without showing cause to a court. It is not a change that we should enact without careful consideration by the appropriate committees in the House and Senate.

In a letter to Members of Congress commenting on the Senate amendment, Leslie H. Jackson, head of the POW organization, American Ex-Prisoners of War, said "As we limit the rights of human beings, even those of the enemy, we become more like the enemy. That makes us weaker and imperils our troops. I am proud to be an American and proud of my service to my country. This Amendment, well intentioned as it may be, will diminish us." William D. Rogers, former Under Secretary of State during the Ford Administration, also expressed serious concerns about the possible impacts of this amendment. He warns, "To proclaim democratic government to the rest of the world as the supreme form of government at the very moment we eliminate the most important avenue of relief from arbitrary governmental decision will not serve our interests in the larger world."

Second, this legislation also includes a provision that would undermine a ban on torture by allowing testimony obtained by torture to be used to hold and to punish detainees. Both the House and the Senate have voted overwhelmingly in past weeks that our nation should prohibit the use of torture. We have agreed that the use of torture is antithetical to a moral nation and that it harms our reputation as the exemplar of democracy and freedom throughout the world. We have also heard from intelligence experts that information obtained in interrogations that use techniques like "waterboarding" or simulated drowning, often produce unreliable information. Yet, while this legislation condemns the use of torture on one hand, on the other hand it countenances the use of information obtained through torture to eliminate legal rights.

I urge my colleagues to reject these provisions in order to protect our time-tested judicial review process and to keep our commitment to end the use of torture.

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, this conference report has flaws, and I dislike the way it was developed. But I think it deserves to be approved, and want to highlight a few reasons why.

First, the conference report includes the original McCain amendment related to treatment of detainees, with additional language agreed to by the conferees and the Administration that provides our military and intelligence personnel with criminal and civil defenses modeled on those already provided to military personnel under the Uniformed Code of Military Justice in specific circumstances.

I strongly supported the McCain amendment because, while it's said actions speak louder than words, reputations depend on both—and, fairly or not, for people around the world the actions of a few Americans at Abu Ghraib have left a stain on America's reputation and have made it harder for our troops to win the war against Islamic terrorists. Erasing that stain and protecting our soldiers from abuse will take both respectable actions and credible words—and enactment of this part of the conference report will give credibility to our words.

I also am glad to note that the conference report includes the language adopted by the Senate saying that says 2006 should be a period of significant transition to full Iraqi sovereignty, with Iraqi security forces taking the lead for the security of a free and sovereign Iraq, thereby creating the conditions for a phased redeployment of U.S. forces from Iraq, and requiring quarterly reports until all combat brigades have been redeployed from Iraq.

With my colleagues Representatives OSBORN, TAUSCHER, and SCHWARZ, I urged that this be retained in the conference report as a step toward the greater unity among Members of Congress and the Administration that I think will be needed for a successful outcome in Iraq. So, its inclusion is another reason I support the conference report.

There are also many broad provisions in the bill that benefit our troops. An important one increases the end strength for the Army and Marine Corps by 30,000 and 4,000 respectively, thereby helping to ease the strain on our troops. I'm also glad that the bill includes provisions to increase recruiting and retention incentives, increase the death gratuity to $100,000, and provide a 3.1% pay raise for members of the armed forces. The bill also provides better force protection for our troops, including nearly doubled funding for up-armored Humvees.

Also critical is the report's provision authorizing reservists who agree to continue service to buy into a government-subsidized TRICARE healthcare program for themselves and their families. Along with many of my colleagues in the House, I have fought for some time to expand TRICARE for the Guard and Reserve, so I take great pleasure in knowing that the report includes this provision that will improve healthcare access for our men and women in the Selected Reserve. As long as our Nation continues to use our reserve components in the same capacities as active duty troops, they deserve similar benefits for similar service. The needs of our Reservists will continue to grow as we continue to call them to service in the war in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Also important—especially at this time of budget tightening—is the report's focus on reining in costs of major procurement programs, particularly the Future Combat Systems and other programs that have relied on immature technology. Similarly, provisions included to reform the acquisition system will strengthen current law governing cost overruns.

I am also pleased that the report fully authorizes Cooperative Threat Reduction funding as well as additional funding for a Department of Energy nonproliferation program to implement agreements between the U.S. and Russia. One of the biggest dangers we face is the threat of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction in the hands of terrorists, yet the CTR program is currently funded at a lower level than it was before September 11th. So I am glad that report conferees recognized the importance of increasing CTR funding.

On a less positive note, I am concerned that the report authorizes nearly $50 billion in a "bridge fund"—over and above the $440 billion in the regular bill—for FY06 supplemental appropriations for the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan and the global war on terror. While inclusion in the report does mean that the authorizing process has been followed to an extent, still, the additional money in this bridge fund should be included in the regular budget request, since there is nothing unexpected about the need for these funds. The "emergency" label that these funds bear hides the fact that they do increase the size of the budget deficit. I don't believe this is a responsible way for us to pay for our military operations.

And I have concerns about the provision related to the ability of detainees at Guantanamo Bay to seek judicial review of their situations. My understanding is that this could have the effect of allowing use of evidence obtained by coercive interrogations. At least one lawyer who represents detainees at Guantanamo has described the combination of the McCain amendment and this provision as one step forward and two steps back. I think we must carefully monitor implementation of this provision and be prepared to consider revisions in the near future.

Further, Mr. Speaker, as a new Member of the Armed Services Committee, I want to express my appreciation to Chairman HUNTER and for working with me on a number of provisions in the report that are important to me and my state of Colorado.

In particular, I am pleased that the report includes favorable language on the Pueblo Chemical Depot, a former chemical weapons site located in southeastern Colorado. Coloradans were alarmed last year when the demilitarization project was put on hold, so they want to see that the Defense Department is committed to using the neutralization technology to destroy the 2,600 tons of mustard agent stored at Pueblo—not transporting the weapons to a different site for destruction. The Colorado delegation has worked hard to put the project back on the right track, so I am grateful for language in the bill directing the Secretary of the Army to continue to implement fully the neutralization technology at Pueblo.

And, finally, the conference report includes provisions dealing with a matter of particular interest to Coloradans—the future of Rocky Flats.

Located at the edge of the Denver metropolitan area, Rocky Flats formerly was part of the complex of sites where nuclear weapons were made. After that use ended, the Department of Energy and its contractors worked to have the site cleaned up and closed. That monumental task is now complete, and when the regulatory certification of cleanup and closure is issued, and most of the site will be transferred to the Interior Department for management as a national wildlife refuge pursuant to the Rocky Flats Wildlife Refuge Act.

That Act, which I sponsored with Senator WAYNE ALLARD, includes some provisions related to the non-Federal minerals—primarily sand and gravel—at Rocky Flats. The purpose of those provisions is to make clear that while these mineral rights are to be respected as private property, their future development could have adverse effects on the land, wildlife habitat, and other values of the future wildlife refuge. I think the best way to avoid that is for the Federal Government to acquire the minerals. This conference report will facilitate acquisition of part of those mineral rights, and while I think its terms leave room for improvement its enactment will enable valuable progress to be made.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think the conference report deserves enactment and I urge its approval.

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the extension of the Defense Department's Section 1207 Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization (SADBU) program through September 2009. I am very pleased to see this program extended in this bill because it has proven to be extremely effective in fighting discrimination in the defense contracting process, and has been tremendously successful in ensuring that African Americans, Latinos, Asians, and Native Americans are able to compete more effectively for government contracts.

The goal of the SADBU program is to provide opportunities for all Americans to take part in the defense contracting process. Since its inception in 1987, the SADBU program has helped to level the playing field for small and disadvantaged businesses. However, there is still a lot that needs to be done. Years of Congressional hearings have shown that minorities have historically been unfairly excluded from both public and private construction contracts in general, and from federal defense contracts in particular. And a recent study by MGT of America revealed that minority-owned and women-owned businesses in New Jersey still faced significant challenges in obtaining state contracts. Many business owners and representatives stated that their opportunities to perform work as subcontractors on state contracts decreased after the suspension of the state's minority and women business enterprise program. If the federal SADBU program were to end, a lot of the progress we have made to this point would likely be erased. That's why this extension is so important.

Mr. Speaker, the 1207 program helps to correct the problems of discrimination without imposing an undue burden on other businesses. It is not a quota. It is not a set-aside. It is not a guarantee of contracts or dollars. It is simply about fairness, and the ability of minority-owned businesses to compete more effectively for federal defense contracts. All of us benefit when recipients of federal opportunities reflect America's diversity, and I'm proud to support the reauthorization of the 1207 program.

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I will vote in favor of this bill, but I do not support all of the provisions in it. I am especially concerned about the McCain language related to treatment of detainees in the War on Terrorism and about the consequences of that language on our ability to prevent attacks against Americans.

A recent editorial in the December 14, 2005 issue of USA Today expresses my views very well, and I include it at this point in the RECORD:

[From USA Today, Dec. 15, 2005]

MISGUIDED MORALITY

(By Andrew C. McCarthy and Clifford D. May)

No one favors torture. Torture is already illegal under both U.S. and international law. Nonetheless, the United States is fighting a war against ruthless enemies who obey no rules. We cannot afford to treat all of them with kid gloves all the time.

On the battlefield, we can—and do—kill our enemies. Those we don't kill but only capture should be treated humanely, despite the fact that they do not return the favor when they seize Americans. But those who have information that could save lives must be interrogated effectively. That does not imply torture. It does imply measures that the McCain amendment would ban.

Contrary to what you might have heard, "ticking time-bomb" scenarios are not uncommon. Consider the situation faced by Army Lt. Col. Allen West: Fighting near Tikrit, he captured a suspect who refused to divulge information about a planned ambush.

West fired his revolver to frighten the suspect. The trick worked. The terrorist talked. American lives were saved. And West was accused of torture, charged with assault and drummed out of the military. Next time, will an officer in the same situation decide to let Americans be killed—believing that's what Americans back home demand?

Even more common than the ticking time bomb is the scenario in which a "high-value" suspect is captured, for example a senior al-Qaeda commander who might not know about an imminent attack but who does have information on terrorist recruiting, training and communications.

In this circumstance, torture is not only unneeded but also unhelpful. But the use of "stress and duress" techniques, including rewards for cooperation and punishments for defiance, can, over time, induce a subject to reveal what he knows.

Good policy requires clarity and accountability. Though torture is to be avoided, vague terms such as "cruel" and "degrading" inevitably would be stretched to coddle terrorists unduly. Congress should instead set clear standards, consulting intelligence experts and medical professionals to flesh out which techniques should always be prohibited (for example, those likely to cause death or permanent disability), and which are permissible—and most likely to yield reliable lifesaving information.

Accountability means not leaving serious judgments to junior personnel. Harsh interrogation methods, such as covert operations under current federal law, should require approval by a highranking administration official.

Obviously, distinctions must be made between terrorist leaders and low-level operatives. Even so, those arguing that it is better to sacrifice the lives of U.S. troops—or even an American city—rather than cause a terrorist temporary discomfort are making a terrible mistake. They urge a self-destructive policy and a misguided morality.

Ms. MCCOLLUM of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my support for H.R. 1815, the Department of Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2006.

Mr. Speaker, torture can never be tolerated. As a country that has historically stood for the promotion and strengthening of human rights, our government must not be allowed to blur the line, bend the rules or otherwise distort the truth on acts that are clearly degrading, inhumane and cruel. Senator JOHN MCCAIN's amendment to the Fiscal Year 2006 Defense Authorization, and subsequently Appropriations, bills, was overwhelming supported in the Senate, and had bipartisan support in the House. Regardless of who we are fighting, and regardless of how the war is going, as Americans, we must never allow ourselves to again be accused of torture. Torture destroys the lives of those who are its victims as well as the lives, moral authority and strength of those who commit such devastating acts or support them.

As a cosponsor of the Interrogation Procedures Act of 2005, H.R. 3985, which is identical to Senator MCCAIN's amendment, I am pleased that conferees were able to come to a good agreement in regard to Senator MCCAIN's amendment. This amendment deserved the utmost support and respect, and I believe that in the end, the conferees were able to incorporate a clear, unambiguous statement on the unacceptability of torture by the U.S. government and military.

As media reports of alleged torture and extraordinary rendition become increasingly common, and as reports continue of "secret" CIA prisons operated throughout Eastern Europe, I am extremely pleased that the Administration has finally, publicly supported the MCCAIN ban on torture. I was appalled earlier this month, and in November, to hear of Vice President CHENEY's lobbying of Members of Congress to have this provision stripped, arguing that the provision would restrict the "flexibility" of the intelligence and military communities to wage an "effective" war against terror.

With this conference report, the United States has made a clear, unambiguous, and strong statement condemning torture and outlawing its use by any U.S. military personnel or on any U.S. facility in the world. This is to be greatly commended and I thank my colleagues for their support of this provision.

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the conference report to the "National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2006."

I am thrilled that this legislation includes provisions to provide retirement credit to the members of the National Guard serving on State duty who responded to the 9/11 attacks in New York and at the Pentagon.

I, along with Representative KING and other members of the New York delegation, introduced legislation earlier this year which would accomplish the same goal, and I am thankful that the committee has worked with us to correct this inequity.

I especially would like to thank Chairman MCHUGH for his steadfast support of these provisions.

My friend and colleague Representative KING has been invaluable in this endeavor, and I thank him for his efforts.

I also would like to commend Chairman HUNTER, Ranking Member SKELTON, Ranking Member SNYDER, and their staffs for their work on this issue.

Lastly, I would like to acknowledge Senator CLINTON for her support and for introducing the companion legislation in the Senate.

In the aftermath of 9/11, the National Guard responded to the call of duty heroically.

While others were moving toward safety, the Guard moved into unknown dangers around Ground Zero.

They did not know if another attack was coming, but they did not hesitate to respond. All they did was their selfless duty.

For almost a year after 9/11, these National Guard heroes streamlined the movement of rescue personnel during the critical first phases of the response and they endured the toxic air conditions of Ground Zero with thousands of responders.

However, the National Guard units that served in the disaster zones of New York after 9/11 did not receive Federal retirement credit, while the National Guard units that protected Federal sites like West Point are receiving Federal retirement credit.

While protecting Federal sites was an important duty after 9/11, those who risked their lives at Ground Zero, in the most dangerous conditions anywhere in the country, deserve the same fair treatment.

By including these provisions in this conference report, we are showing our gratitude to the brave men and women who responded on September 11th by giving them the retirement benefits to which they are entitled.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, while I am a strong supporter of the brave men and women who serve in our armed forces, I am deeply opposed to the unnecessary and pernicious last-minute amendment added to this bill by Senators GRAHAM, LEVIN, and KYL. I am also disappointed that the conferees have made further changes to the provision that will only further damage our rule of law and compromise the efforts of our soldiers around the world.

Their amendment, which is now Section 1405 of this bill, may severely curtail the federal court's review of detainees operations in ways that do irreparable damage to our rule of law. The provision also fails unequivocally to condemn torture and abuse, or the erratic and unreliable information that practice yields. These flaws are contrary to the fundamental principles of our legal traditions.

Let me first focus on the torture issue. Never before in America's proud history have we countenanced a system in which there is even a possibility that human liberty might be taken away based on evidence extracted by torture. And it is this refusal to debase ourselves, by resorting to immoral and illegal techniques, that lies at the core of our best and most noble traditions.

We should have made clear beyond doubt in this provision that we do not approve of and we are not willing to tolerate a system that rests on torture today. Even if it were true that there may be some extreme case—say, the infamous "ticking time-bomb" scenario—that could vindicate the use of abhorrent physical coercion, that exceptional case would not warrant the use of that evidence—evidence that our intelligence services have told us is very often unreliable—in subsequent judicial proceedings. There is simply no excuse or justification for this omission.

As we try to establish new democracies and the rule of law for Iraq and Afghanistan in place of sanctuaries for terrorists, Congress's failure to condemn and bar abuse is shameful, intolerable, and deeply hypocritical: How can we refuse to practice what we preach to other countries?

Congress must return to this issue as soon as possible and make good the promise of Senator MCCAIN's wise anti-abuse provision; after all standards are important but, as we have learned time and time again, we also need accountability and enforcement.

Time is of the essence because continued torture and abuse hurts our efforts in Iraq and beyond against al Qaeda. The persistent wave of stories about prisoners detained for the wrong reasons, or subjected to inappropriate treatment or abuse while in U.S. custody has inflicted terrible harm on our reputation, and on the efforts by our brave men and women in Iraq to win the hearts and minds campaign. Establishing a meaningful system of accountability for detainee operations is not only a matter of restoring America's honor in the eyes in the world, it is a vital part of our counterterrorism strategy.

Accountability, moreover, cannot be achieved without independent monitoring mechanisms. The rule of law, as events of the past four years have made clear, dies behind closed doors and barbed-wire. Cutting off meaningful judicial supervision of the Guantánamo Naval Base will not restore the military's honor. And turning the federal courts into rubber stamps for decisions generated through the rack and the screw would stain our legal traditions.

As Senator SPECTER powerfully urged, these difficult issues must be assigned to the House and Senate Judiciary Committees for their careful and expert consideration. Senator SPECTER's wise counsel has been repeated in letters from senior members of our armed forces, who have already retired; a bipartisan group of respected former federal judges; the American Bar Association; and a broad cross-section of professors from the legal academy. This wide-ranging opposition indicates how thorny these issues are, and how unwise it is to move so quickly on them.

I am heartened, however, that we have been able to preserve much that is not harmful in this provision. There are some sound ideas embedded in these provisions that we should use when we reconsider these issues.

Central to Congress's aim in this provision is a distinction between those detainees who have already been subject to a Combatant Status Review Tribunal (CSRT) and new detainees who will be subject to a future CSRT procedure that Congress will certify more than six months from now. For those who have already been subject to a CSRT and now challenge either that procedure or the lawfulness of the military commission system, the provision does not affect access to the federal courts.

Through section (h)(2), Congress has crafted a new system of judicial review for cases that will be brought under a new system of CSRTs, to be designed by the Secretary of Defense and reviewed with care by Congress. These appeals from new CSRTs will be heard in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. And even in these new cases, the provision does not alter the now-established ability of attorneys to visit clients at Guantánamo. Attorneys litigating their cases in a circuit court need access to and communication with their client, as recent filings in the Hamdan v. Rumsfeld case show.

But section (h)(2) also circumscribes the new system of review to new cases, which will of necessity arise more than six months from now, when the new CSRT procedures have been promulgated. We have preserved the existing, expansive review role of the federal courts for the habeas petitions filed by those who have already been through a CSRT. So detainees who have already had a CSRT hearing, including those who have pending habeas petitions, will continue to have traditional habeas review.

We also chose in paragraph 3 of subsection (e) not to legislate an abstention rule. For those who have filed challenges to their military commissions, we did not take the extraordinary step of requiring convictions or other exhaustion before they come into federal court. As in Ex Parte Quirin, we have permitted pre-conviction challenge to be brought up to the U.S. Supreme Court. Paragraph 3 simply governs challenges to "final decisions" of commissions, and does not impact challenges when they are not brought "under [that] paragraph." See Section 1405 (e)(3)(c),(d).

To be sure, a few provisions are singled out to apply to pending cases, but these are provisions that give those who have filed cases additional rights, instead of taking any rights away. One such provision was added in conference with respect to coerced testimony, Section 1405(b)(2). But that provision does not in any way alter the clear intent of the Congress, which was to grandfather the jurisdiction of existing Guantánamo habeas and mandamus lawsuits under Lindh v. Murphy.

As such, nothing in the legislation alters or impacts the jurisdiction or merits of Hamdan. And, quite obviously, nothing in the legislation constitutes affirmative authorization, or even toleration, for the military commissions at issue in that case. That is the question that the Supreme Court will decide in the coming months. Our mention of commissions simply reflects, but does not endorse, the fact that the lower court in Hamdan held them legal.

This provision attempts to address problems that have occurred in the determinations of the status of people detained by the military at Guantánamo Bay and elsewhere. It recognizes that the CSRT procedures applied in the past were inadequate and must be changed going forward. As the former Chief Judge of the U.S. Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court found, in In Re Guantánamo Detainee Cases, the past CSRT procedures "deprive[d] the detainees of sufficient notice of the factual bases for their detention and den[ied] them a fair opportunity to challenge their incarceration," and allowed "reliance on statements possibly obtained through torture or other coercion." Her review "call[ed] into serious question the nature and thoroughness" of the past CSRT process. The former CSRT procedures were not issued by the Secretary of Defense, were not reported to or approved by Congress, did not provide for final determinations by a civilian official answerable to Congress, did not provide for the consideration of new evidence, and did not address the use of statements possibly obtained through coercion.

To address these problems, this provision requires the Secretary of Defense to issue new CSRT procedures and report those procedures to the appropriate committees of Congress; it requires that going forward the determinations be made by a Designated Civilian Official who is answerable to Congress; it provides for the periodic review of new evidence; it provides for future CSRTs to assess whether statements were derived from coercion and their probative value; and it provides for review in the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals for these future CSRT determinations.

At the same time, in accordance with our traditions, this amendment does not apply retroactively to revoke the jurisdiction of the courts to consider pending claims invoking the Great Writ of Habeas Corpus challenging past enemy combatant determinations reached without the safeguards this amendment requires for future determinations. The amendment alters the original language introduced by Senator GRAHAM so that those pending cases are not affected by this provision. Accordingly, subsection (h)(1) establishes that generally the provisions of this section, including subsection (e)(1), which affects the substantive rights of parties, apply only as of the date of enactment of this provision in accordance with the Supreme Court's decision in Lindh v. Murphy.

Recognizing the Supreme Court's concerns about judicial independence in cases such as City of Boerne v. Flores and United States v. Morrison, we have underscored that Congress is not attempting to settle any constitutional question that is the proper province of the federal courts. Thus in sections (e)(2)(C)(ii), (e)(3)(D)(ii), and (f), we have made clear, out of an abundance of caution, that we not purport to decide any constitutional question that remains within the proper bailiwick of the federal courts pursuant to Article III of the Constitution. Thus, this provision does not speak to the constitutionality of the military commissions or the old CSRTs. We leave it to the courts to decide these questions.

H. Res. 483

Whereas 1 in 3 female high school students reports being physically abused or sexually abused by a dating partner;

Whereas over 40 percent of male and female high school students surveyed had been victims of dating violence at least once;

Whereas violent relationships in adolescence can have serious ramifications for victims, who are at higher risk for substance abuse, eating disorders, risky sexual behavior, suicide, and adult re-vicimization;

Whereas the severity of violence among intimate partners has been shown to increase if the pattern was established in adolescence;

Whereas 81 percent of parents surveyed either believed dating violence is not a problem or admitted they did not know it is a problem;

Whereas the week of February 6, 2006, has been recognized as an appropriate week for activities furthering awareness of teen dating violence; and

Whereas recognizing a "National Teen Dating Violence Awareness and Prevention Week" would benefit schools, communities, and families regardless of socioeconomic status, race, or gender: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives should raise awareness of teen dating violence in the Nation by supporting the goals and ideals of National Teen Dating Violence Awareness and Prevention Week.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ISSA

Mr. ISSA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike all after the resolved clause and insert the following:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives supports an increased awareness among parents, schools, and communities that dating violence is a criminal act and the ideals of the National Teen Dating Violence and Prevention Week.

Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I offer heartfelt thanks to you for bringing this important resolution to the floor. Thanks to the Ranking Member as well. I join with my friend and co-sponsor, the gentlewoman from Connecticut, NANCY JOHNSON in bringing this very important legislation to the floor.

I am delighted to be able to say that my colleagues in this great Congress understand that protecting our children from violence is of utmost importance and that we as a body support the ideals of National Teen Dating Violence Awareness and Protection Week through H. Res. 483.

Teen Dating Violence is the proverbial elephant in the room. Too many girls are the victims of abuse perpetrated by an intimate partner and yet too many parents are unaware that their daughters live with this tragic reality. The facts are horrifying:

Girls and young women between the ages of 16 and 24 experience the highest per capita rates of non-fatal intimate partner violence of all women.

Many of our teens report experiencing some kind of abuse in their romantic relationships, including verbal and emotional abuse.

Over half of a national survey of parents either believe teen dating violence is not an issue or admit they don't know to what extent it is an issue.

It is time to end this gap between what we believe about teen dating violence and what is actually happening to our sisters, daughters, and granddaughters in their relationships.

The only way we will be able to combat this epidemic is if we are educated about it. Teen Dating Violence Awareness and Prevention Week is a crucial step towards acquiring this knowledge.

I am a mother of daughters and a grandmother of granddaughters. I hate to think of them engaged in a relationship where they may be at risk, emotionally, physically or mentally. But just because I do not want to think about this, does not mean I should not think about it.

Through communication and further education we will take away the stigma of coming forward to report abuse by a partner. We learn to recognize the signs that our girls are in trouble. We will help victims leave their relationships and get the help they need to embark on relationships that are worthy of their greatness.

I am passionate about this program because of its message of understanding and prevention, but also because teenager took it upon themselves to start this campaign towards consciousness on this issue.

I have deep admiration for the young women and men who attended the national awareness and education summit last year and were motivated enough to develop toolkits for schools and propose National Teen Dating Violence Awareness and Prevention Week. I will be proud to stand with them during that week in February. These young people will be the future leaders of our country, and we should all applaud them!

I want to thank Congresswoman NANCY JOHNSON for all of her help in ensuring that this bill received the attention it deserved and all of the co-sponsors who recognized the importance of this issue. I also want to thank Senator MIKE CRAPO for his leadership in the Senate. What a testament to the power of bipartisanship this has been, and how both chambers recognize the severity of this issue.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment to the preamble.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike the preamble and insert the following:

Whereas the American Bar Association's National Teen Dating Violence Prevention (TDVPI) is a federally funded, comprehensive program that is aimed at putting a stop to the incidence of teen dating violence;

Whereas the TDVPI together with parents, schools and communities intends to positively impact the way teens view and value themselves and others;

Whereas the TDVPI is designed to teach and influence appropriate interpersonal behavior by increasing the knowledge and skills of our nation's youth enabling them to form lasting and healthy relationships as adults; and

Whereas the week of February 6, 2006 has been recognized as an appropriate week for activities furthering awareness of teen dating violence; Now, therefore, be it

(E) by redesignating subparagraphs (A) and (B) as paragraphs (1) and (2), respectively.

Mr. POMBO (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment in the nature of a substitute be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

What is the amendment about? Can you read it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object to dispensing with the reading?

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is considered as read.

There was no objection.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my support for H.R. 2099. Among its provisions, H.R. 2099 reauthorizes the Illinois and Michigan (I&M) Canal National Heritage Corridor to receive appropriations and transfers management entity status from the federal, I&M Commission to the non-profit Canal Corridor Association. I would like to commend Chairman Pombo and the House Committee on Resources for their hard work on this important piece of legislation.

The I&M Canal changed the nation in 1848 when it opened the first shipping route between New York and New Orleans, designating Chicago as the nation's greatest inland port. While the canal eventually fell into disuse due to new transportation methods and routes, in 1982, business and industry leaders founded the Canal Corridor Association to help revitalize the I&M Canal region, and in doing so, created a national model for regional partnership, conservation and renewal. I am proud to say that the I&M Canal National Heritage Corridor was America's charter National Heritage area, being created by an act of Congress in 1984. For 20 years, the federal I&M Commission has worked to carry out the mission of the I&M Canal National Heritage Corridor. Its efforts have been particularly successful during the past five years that Phyllis Ellin has provided strong leadership as the Executive Director of the Commission.

Since 1984, the I&M Canal National Heritage Corridor has increasingly become an engine of economic growth in communities up and down the length of the Corridor; primarily through an increase in tourism but also in the use of the Corridor for recreational purposes. After consulting with local officials and those most interested and involved in the I&M Canal, it seems that the private sector approach offers more advantages to handle the increased work load brought on by the recent success of the canal and interest in heritage tourism.

As a result, H.R. 2099 designates the Canal Corridor Association (CCA) as the new management entity of the I&M Canal National Heritage Corridor. The CCA seeks to enhance economic vitality by raising awareness of and expanding the parks, trails, landscapes, and historic sites that make the I&M Canal region a special place. They have also successfully implemented education programs and improved the cultural, environmental, historic and tourism resources that the canal offers.

Under the leadership of the CCA, through their governance of the I&M Canal, will continue to successfully educate citizens of the nationally historical importance of the I&M Canal and to play a pivotal role in the continued economic redevelopment of the region.

Once again, I would like to thank Chairman POMBO and the entire Resources committee for making sure this important legislation passes before we adjourn.

Ms. MCKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support a bill that is close to my heart as well as the hearts of many others in the 4th Congressional District of Georgia. That is, H.R. 2099, the Arabia Mountain National Heritage Area Act. It would establish Arabia Mountain as a National Heritage Area, a recognition that is long overdue.

Arabia Mountain, a hidden treasure in its own right, is a place where natural, cultural, historic and recreational resources are intricately woven together to form an interconnected, nationally unique landscape. A true Georgia treasure—and an American one, too.

Arabia Mountain spans 4,000 acres and three counties.

Arabia Mountain is part of an area in eastern Metropolitan Atlanta that has been linked to human settlement and activity for thousands of years. This area not only includes the mountain, but also lakes, rivers, quarries, marked trails, and farmland in the surrounding area.

The history of human settlement in this region is intimately connected to its geological resources, starting over 7,000 years ago with the quarrying and trading of soapstone. Not only is this home for deer, beavers, and other animals but a place where everyday people can find peace and get away from the hustle and bustle of urban sprawl and enjoy a piece of America's true beauty.

Arabia Mountain is home to plants that only can be found on the mountain. Arabia Mountain is truly a national heritage area.

Arabia Mountain is also a place where families can come together to take a hike, be a part of a class, and even enjoy a cookout. We are in the midst of a season that causes us to remember the most important things in our lives—family.

Family, Mr. Speaker, is what Arabia Mountain is about. It is a place where you can watch the sunset with someone you love, photograph unique flora, discover Georgia's lizards with your child, or blowout her candles at a birthday party. I invite my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to vote yes on H.R.

2099, the Arabia Mountain National Heritage Area Act. Arabia Mountain is, indeed, a genuine American beauty.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity to thank Georgia Senators SAXBY CHAMBLISS and JOHNNY ISAKSON for their support; Georgia's Department of Natural Resources for its valuable input; my colleagues DAVID SCOTT and JIM MARSHALL for cosponsoring this bill; and my staff for preparing this bill and helping it get to the Floor of the House today. I'd especially like to thank Congressman POMBO, Chairman of the House Resources Committee and his staff and NICK RAHALL, its Ranking Member, and his staff, for their advice and counsel as this bill went through the legislative process in the House.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JUNIOR DUCK STAMP REAUTHORIZATION AMENDMENTS ACT OF 2005

Mr. POMBO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Resources be discharged from further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3179) to reauthorize and amend the Junior Duck Stamp Conservation and Design Program Act of 1994, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. OBEY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, for the last 8 hours, we have been dealing with a majority leadership that has stripped out of the appropriations process and out of the conference virtually every major understanding we have had on those bills. We have had the United States Senate ram down our throats an ANWR provision. And then after we were assured in conference that there would be no language with respect to drug company indemnification, 3 hours after the conference report we get 45 pages of language which Senator FRIST and the Speaker of the House demanded be included in the conference report after the conference was specifically told it would not be in there.

Now, I want to know how do we have assurances on any bill brought to this floor under unanimous consent that that same kind of nonsense is not occurring in these instances? I have a responsibility as the ranking member of the Appropriations Committee to try to defend the integrity of this House, and I will use any opportunity I can to point out how the majority leadership in this House is destroying the principle that this is supposed to be the greatest deliberative body in the world.

How long is the bill? Because, Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to demand that every single bill that comes up tonight be read in its entirety.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is four pages.

Mr. OBEY. I would like to have the bill read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under this unanimous-consent procedure a bill is reported by title only.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw that request because I did not inform the gentleman ahead of time, and he just happened to get in the line of fire on something he should not have been involved in.

Mr. POMBO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. Absolutely.

Mr. POMBO. The bills that we are doing by UC right now are bills that have been before the committee for a long time. The particular bill you are objecting to is a bill that the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ORTIZ) has been working on for years. It is something that means a lot to him. He was sitting right behind you just a minute ago, and I am sure he would be happy to explain it to you. We are not adding anything new into the bill of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ORTIZ).

Mr. OBEY. I am not objecting to any bill, and I am not suggesting you did. What I am doing is using the only avenue available to me since we are operating under some very strange rules in this House to point out that even if these matters had been cleared on both sides of the aisle, there is really no way for the individual Member to protect himself if the leadership of this House is going to depart from what ought to be the custom in this place of not dictating what goes into conference reports.

Mr. POMBO. If the gentleman will yield, these bills have been worked out. They have been cleared by the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. RAHALL) and myself. Most of these bills are from your side of the aisle, and they are bills that have been worked on for a number of years. There is nothing in here that has changed. I understand your frustration. It happens every year when we get to the end of the session that stupid stuff happens.

Mr. OBEY. With all due respect, what does not happen is that the leadership does not abuse its power routinely to alter the contents of conference reports. So I know the gentleman didn't, and I have no objection to the gentleman proceeding. But I wanted to use this as an opportunity to point out that the leadership of this House, starting with the Speaker of the House, is abdicating his responsibility to protect the integrity of this institution.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. POMBO. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my unanimous consent request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request is withdrawn.

Mr. POMBO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Resources be discharged from further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3179) to reauthorize and amend the Junior Duck Stamp Conservation and Design Program Act of 1994, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MARKEY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is one of the most preposterous situations that the House has ever been placed in. Poised to be placed before the House in just a matter of moments is a bill, the Defense appropriations bill, which is in violation of the germaneness rules of the House; it is in violation of any scope that the Defense appropriations bill has ever allowed to be considered in that bill because inside that bill is a provision which will in fact allow for the drilling in the Arctic Wildlife Refuge.

The gentleman from California is the chairman of the committee, the Natural Resources Committee, which has jurisdiction over the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

Mr. POMBO. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my unanimous consent request.

Mr. MARKEY. The gentleman is out here propounding. I would like to continue to be recognized.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will suspend.

The request is withdrawn.
